MANASSE SIGHT IS PRICELESS OPTICIAN.
TRIBUNE BUILDING

Many persons, both young and old, have eyes so imperfectly formed that they are constantly strained when in use. This strain will cause weak eyes and painful sight, which may usually be relieved with properly fitted glasses. Having a long experience in this line enables me to secure perfect results. My glasses are ground with mathematical accuracy, which commends them to all wearers. They not only give clear and distinct vision, do not weary and fatigue the eye, but tend to strengthen and preserve the sight.

THE RAILROADS.

East-Bound Freight Traffic Continues Unusually Light.

The Pennsylvania and Grand Trunk Claiming Larger Percentages.

A Great Commotion at Oneida, Owing to an Attempted Street-Gobble.

East-Bound Freight Business Still Continues Unusually Light.

There has been no perceptible change in east-bound freight business during the past week, and shipments continue as light as ever. The railroads leading east from this city are now taking only about one-third of the amount of freight they took out this time last year. The hopes of the railroads that the break in the price of grain in this market about a week ago would stimulate shipments have not been realized. The amount of flour, grain, and provisions taken out of this city by the Eastern lines during the past week was 388 tons more than for the week before. There is not the least prospect that the railroads, as long as they adhere to the present rates, will be able to increase their shipments even if the prices of grain or provisions in the West should suffer a still further decline. The prices here are still much higher than they are in the East, and Europe does not want or need any of our stuff. But, aside from this, there remains but little grain that is not needed for home consumption in this country. The little that is to go forward will not take the rail routes, but will seek the cheaper channels by lake and river. The stuff the railroads are carrying now is such as is needed for immediate consumption in the East and to points which cannot be reached by the lake or river routes.

It does not appear that any of the roads are trying to increase their shipments by cutting the rates. If any cutting is done it must be from points outside of Chicago. The Grand Trunk is no longer carrying the bulk of business, but has come down to a fair percentage. The Fort Wayne is now getting the bulk of business, but no one charges this line with cutting the rates, as the Pennsylvania people have all along shown a disposition to maintain tariff rates. They assert that the business they are doing is simply due to their being a favorit route, especially with provision shippers, and their increased facilities and establishment of new lines. The larger percentage of business their line has carried lately, they claim, shows that with even rates they can get the bulk of business from this city, and that in the new pool they are entitled to a larger percentage of the traffic than either of the Vanderbilt lines. The Pennsylvania, as well as the Grand Trunk, have made a demand for increased percentages, and the matter is now in the hands of Commissioner Fink. It is quite certain that if the claim of these roads for an increased amount of business out of Chicago is not complied with there will be considerable difficulty in arranging percentages under the new pooling arrangement. This provides that the percentages should be based upon the amount of business done during 1880. This would give the Vanderbilt lines the largest share of the business. The small percentage of business carried by the Vanderbilt roads duing the past few weeks, it is claimed, shows that these lines can no longer secure the amount of business they carried during 1880.

The reported consolidation of the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways of Canada will, if finally consummated, seriously affect the Michigan Central, and this matter will also cut an important figure in arranging percentages for the roads forming the new pool. There is a prospect that the consolidation of the Grand Trunk and Great Western will bring on another fight with Vanderbilt, and in this event the new pool cannot be carried out, and all the hard work done by Commissioner Fink will have been in vain. If the Eastern pool does go to pieces east-bound freight-rates cannot be maintained at the present figures, as each line will try to get the business at the best rates it can secure.

The total amount of flour, grain, and provisions carried east from this city by the various rail lines during the past week amounted to 22,357 tons, against 21,969 tons for the previous week, an increase of only 388 tons. The total shipments for the corresponding week last year amounted to 59,216 tons.

The following statement shows the amount of flour, grain, and provisions carried East from this city by the various rail lines for the week ending April 29, and also the total amounts carried during the corresponding week last year:

	Flour, brls.	Grain, tons of 2,000 lbs.	Provisions tons of 2,000 lbs.	Total tons.
Mich. Cen'l.	7,080	2,130	372	3,209
LakeShore.	5,707	3,808	850	5,228
FortWayne	6,600	4,827	2,078	7,564
Pan-Handle	3,550	1,404	915	2,673
B. & O.	1,550	794	378	1,327
Gr'd Trunk.	6,177	1,436	305	2,357
Total, 1882	30,664	14,399	4,898	22,357
Total, 1881..	94,983	43,822	5,902	59,216

The percentages this year were: Michigan Central, 14.30; Lake Shore, 23.40; Fort Wayne, 33.90; Pan-Handle, 11.90; Baltimore & Ohio, 5.90; Grand Trunk, 10.60.

Guaranteeing the Integrity of Agents' Accounts.

Within a few years there has grown up in the United States a new industry designed to guarantee the integrity of men filling positions of trust in the employ of railroad companies and banks. In England the rate charged by guarantee companies for performing this service for railway employés does not exceed one-half of 1 per cent per annum. The rate charged by the principal companies in this country is three-fourths of 1 per cent. Many think this rate excessive in view of the integrity of the men insured. The Chicago & Northwestern, while it does not formally taboo the guarantee companies, nevertheless allows its agents to give private bonds when they prefer to do so, as will be seen from the following circular just issued by Mr. M. M. Kirkman, Controller of that company:

Hereafter this company will accept private sureties (when satisfactory) from its employés for the faithful performance of their duties. In pursuance of this determination blank bonds will be furnished agents, which they must have executed in the manner described below, and return same to office. These bonds must be perfected without delay, as the bonds of the guarantee company expire May 31 next.

Bonds must be signed by the principal and by two good and responsible sureties. The signatures to the bonds need not be witnessed. The sureties must be men. The justification form printed on the back of the blank must be filled up and sworn to before a Notary Public, Justice of the Peace, or other authorized officer. Each surety (bondsman) must swear that he is worth the amount of the bond in real estate, free from all incumbrances; no exceptions will be made to this rule. Sureties must reside in the same town or county; that is to say, within the jurisdiction of the same court. It is desirable that they should reside at or near the station for which the bond is given, but this is not an arbitrary rule. For obvious reasons sureties should not be men engaged in any kind of business that will be likely to cause them to require any favor from the employé. No officer or employé of the company will be accepted as surety.

Especial care must be exercised to see that the technical requirements of the bond are fully complied with—namely: that the names are properly entered and that the date and amount are inserted in the various spaces provided therefor.

Any informality or omission in the execution of a bond will cause its rejection by the company.

In the case of persons appointed hereafter to new positions requiring a bond, the latter must be executed before the installation of the employé.

Employés who prefer to do so may give the bonds of the guarantee companies when the character of the latter are satisfactory to the Controller.

Foreign Landing Certificates.

The General Foreign Freight Agents of the various fast freight lines running to seaboard points have just issued the following circular:

In consequence of the trouble and difficulty experienced in the procuring of foreign landing certificates, such as are required by the Government for the cancellation of bonds on which our respective companies sign as security for the transportation and exportation of distilled spirits, alcohol, highwines, etc., it has been agreed that on and after May 1, 1882, the landing certificates will be procured through our respective organizations, the cost for procuring same to be collected from the shipper at the same time and in like manner as other seaboard charges.

At the time the through bill of lading is issued, agents will collect and remit as previously instructed the following seaboard charges: Cooperage, seven cents per barrel, 15 cents per puncheon; United States Gagers' fees, 10 cents per package.

Custom-House entry, $1 for each Government bill of lading; for procuring foreign landing certificates, $7 for each bond. No export bond for distilled spirits will be issued for property consigned locally to the seaboard. The system of procuring landing certificates free of expense to the shipper is abolished.

Important Railroad Meeting of the Southwestern Managers.

ST. LOUIS, April 29.—An important meeting of railroad managers occurred here today. There were present Jay Gould, A. L. Hopkins, H. M. Hoxie, R. S. Hayes, John C. Gault, representing the Missouri Pacific, Iron Mountain, and Wabash Roads; C. H. Chappell and J. W. Midgley, of the Chicago & Alton; George Darling, of the White Line; Mr. Steiner, of the Blue Line; and General Manager Potter, of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. The matter under consideration was the Colorado pool and the division of freight percentages. The meeting is still in session and promises to be protracted until night.

The representatives of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy insisted upon an increase of percentage, and called for arbitrators, which was assented to, and the Chairman was directed to appoint a committee which will consider the matter and report to the next meeting of the association. The Southwestern Association also held a meeting, but adjourned without action. It was expected there would be considerable strife and contention over the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy matter, but no trouble occurred and harmonious feeling is understood to have prevailed throughout. Jay Gould was not present at the meeting, as previously stated, but was within call, and was consulted during the discussion of questions before the meeting.

A Community Which Guards Its Rights with Great Vigor.

ONEIDA, N. Y., April 29.—The contractors of the West Shore Road today began filling in Broad street to a level with the road, when the fire-bells rang, and and stopped the work by placing obstructions in the way of the laborers. The citizens have twenty specials on watch tonight, and the railroad men as many more.

1,000 CITIZENS ASSEMBLED

IF AN ATTEMPT IS MADE to renew the work tonight the bells will summon the citizens to the scene, and force will be used, if necessary, to prevent the completion of the plans of the railroad people.

Vanderbilt's Denial of Plans Recently Attributed to Him.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt tonight denied the statement again made current, this time by the Cleveland (O.) Leader, that he is about to retire from the management of the New York Central and Lake Shore system of railroads. Regarding the announcement made that Gen. J. H. Devereux is to be made Vice-President and Executive Manager of the whole system, he said this evening: "That publication is the first I have heard of that project, and there is no truth whatever in it, nor any foundation whatever for the statement."

The Flint & Pere Marquette.

DETROIT, Mich., April 29.—The annual report of the Flint & Pére Marquette Railroad for 1881 is just out. It shows gross earnings of $1,885,414, and net earnings of $570,092, an increase in the former of almost 18 per cent, and in the latter of 25 per cent. After making two dividends of $357,000 surplus, $19,000 is left.

Miscellaneous Items.

Mr. T. P. Shonts has been appointed Superintendent of the Indiana, Illinois & Iowa Railroad Company, with office at Dwight, Ill. Mr. Shonts will have entire charge of the operating departments of the road.

Dining-car conductors Summers, Botherell, and Humphreys left the city yesterday for New York with thirty men (cooks and waiters) to take charge of the new Pennsylvania dining-cars recently built at the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's shops at Altoona, and which in a day or two will commence to run regularly on the limited express of the Pennsylvania Line East and West.

President Blackstone, of the Chicago & Alton, emphatically denies the truth of the rumors that his company had obtained or was about to obtain control of the Kansas Pacific Railroad. No such scheme, President Blackstone says, has been contemplated or talked of, and the Alton has no idea of making any new acquisitions in that direction. Mr. Blackstone does not think that the Union Pacific people have any idea of selling the Kansas Pacific.

Mr. J. A. Sheppard, who retires from the ticket-audit office of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy to assume the position of Chief Clerk of the local passenger service of this road, was presented yesterday afternoon by his late colleagues with a valuable diamond ring, as a token of their regard and esteem. The presentation was made by Capt. Coane, the bookkeeper of the office, who, in behalf of the donors, wished Mr. Sheppard continued success and prosperity. Mr. Sheppard expressed his delight and gratification over this unexpected exhibition of friendship in a few feeling remarks.

Mr. A. H. Hanson, General Passenger Agent of the Illinois Central Railroad, requests that hereafter agents of other lines will issue tickets via the St. Louis & Cairo Short Line, reading "St. Louis & Cairo Short Line (Du Quoin Route, standard gage) St. Louis to Cairo," instead of as heretofore, "St. Louis, Alton & Terre Haute Railroad; St. Louis to Du Quoin; Illinois Central Railroad, Du Quoin to Cairo." Mr. Hanson further stated that the entire proportions accruing between St. Louis and Cairo should be reported to the Illinois Central Railroad.

During the week ending April 29 the daily emigrant express on the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railway has brought into Chicago 2,800 European emigrants destined for the West and Northwest. One party of 300 Danes will locate in Southern Illinois, having the necessary funds to purchase farms and start themselves comfortably. During the past week the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern has brought in thirty-one car-loads of emigrants (about 1,800 people), all of whom came from the Old Country and most of whom went to Minnesota and Dakota.

The General Managers of the Northwestern, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and St. Paul & Omaha Railroads held a meeting yesterday morning at the office of the Northwestern for the purpose of arranging time-tables between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis for the summer. The anticipation that they would decide upon the establishment of fast trains between Chicago and St. Paul were not realized, as they agreed to put in force again last summer's time-table. The time of departure and arrivals of the trains at Chicago will remain the same as during the winter, but they will leave St. Paul a little later than at present and arrive there a little earlier.

Mr. E. G. Mason returned from the East yesterday, and stated to a TRIBUNE reporter that, while he had simply passed through New York, he had received a letter from one of the gentlemen interested in the East Chicago Belt Railroad, who stated that everything looked bright and encouraging. Mr. Mason is the attorney for the company, and is not posted as to the plans of the controlling interest, but he said he knew that several wealthy men were stockholders, and that they were putting out money liberally, having already paid about $500,000 for the right of way.

Tomorrow the Chicago & Northwestern will commence selling round-trip tourist tickets to the various summer resorts in the West, North, and Northwest. The following is a partial list of the points to which such tickets will be sold: Baraboo, Wis. (Devil's Lake), and return, $9.15; Fort Howard, Wis. (Green Bay), and return, $11.25; Green Lake, Wis., and return, $9.15; Lake Geneva, Wis., and return, $3.75; Lake Mills, Wis., and return, $6.60; Madison, Wis., and return, $6.90; McHenry, Ill. (Fox Lake), and return, $2.80; Milwaukee, Wis., and return, $4.50; Sparta, Wis., and return, $13.50; Waukesha and return, $5.25; St. Paul and return, $21; Sheboygan, Wis., and return, $7.50; Elkhart Lake and return (two routes), $8.25; Marquette, Mich., and return (five routes), price ranging from $23 to $32.25, according to route; Duluth and return (ten routes), price ranging from $24.50 to $35.50; Lake Minnetonka and return, $21.75; White Bear Lake, Minn., and return, $21.50; Denver, Pueblo, and Colorado Springs, and return (five routes), $58. These tickets will be good for return passage until Oct. 31, 1882.

Final Preparations at Lexington, Ky., for the Great Races Next Week.

LEXINGTON, April 29.—This morning the old Lexington race-track was an animated spectacle. From daybreak until noon over one hundred thoroughbreds were noticed at work. Some of them, particularly those that are engaged in Tuesday's races, were put through final preparation. There are about 150 horses quartered about the track. The stables of Churchill & Johnson and Dwyer Bros. will not arrive until Monday morning. Hindoo and Runnymede will be the only representatives of the Brooklyn stable. Hindoo will start in the Distillery Stakes, and Southerners say they are ready for him, and should he win he will be a tired horse at the finish. He carries 127 pounds. Other probable starters for this rich prize are Bengal, Mendelssohn, Bend Or, Lida Stanhope, Hegias, Lucy May, and some other good ones. Runnymede will probably start in the Phœnix and Blue Ribbon. Both will doubtless be hard races. Old turfmen say the quality of the horseflesh now at the track is finer than has been seen for years. There surely is a larger lot of untried stock, particularly 2-year-olds. The track is seldom seen in finer shape, due to the efforts of Superintendent Murphy. It has been well worked, and will be very fast should rain not interfere. The grounds have been somewhat improved. The betting arena has been covered and a number of new stables erected. Attractions conducive to the welfare and uninterrupted view of the spectators have been made in the grand-stand. Scores of darkies are busy whitewashing the fences, cabins, and tree stumps in and out of the spacious inclosure, and on Tuesday this race track, which was first opened to the public in 1828, will present an inviting appearance. The city is filling very rapidly, and not only the hotels but the boarding-houses are already filled to their uttermost capacity. Bookmakers and touts are here in large numbers. The latter body is unusually well represented. New York's contingent of bookmakers fraternity will arrive Monday. The Chicago, St. Louis, Louisville, and Cincinnati representatives arrived this morning. A huge number of prominent turfmen are attending today's sale of thoroughbred yearlings of Gen. Harding's Belle Meade Stud Farm at Nashville, Tenn. They will be here in time for Grinstead's sale on Monday next. Pool-men have been assured that their business will not be interfered with.

THE REV. DR. SULLIVAN.

The Canadian House of Bishops Elect the Rev. Dr. Sullivan to the Vacant Bishopric of Algoma.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MONTREAL, April 29.—The House of Bishops today nominated the Rev. Dr. Sullivan, rector of St. George's Church here, late of Chicago, to the vacant Bishopric of Algoma, vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Fauquier. The nomination was unanimously indorsed with applause by the Lower House. A motion was passed in the synod before the nomination making the salary $4,000 per annum, but after the appointment it was proposed to raise the stipend to $5,000. The Bishop-elect requested that the motion would not be put to the meeting. The nomination of Dr. Sullivan took every one by surprise, as he had not been mentioned or thought of beforehand. He will make a sacrifice of income in leaving St. George's. A short time since he was offered the rectorship of one of the largest churches in New York with nearly double the income he had here, but declined to move. He is a general and deserved favorite in Montreal, and his removal will cause the deepest regret throughout the city.

THE PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS.

SUNDAY, APRIL 30, 1882.

WHILE the Republicans have passed their Congressional apportionment in spite of the opposition of certain contemptible marplots, they have allowed the Democrats to divide and beat them on the Senatorial apportionment. They must pull themselves together this week and put their bill through. It is a good bill, and cannot be improved by tinkering it. All changes made in it will be for the worse.

IT is not often that new wheat comes into market in April, but it has this year. A consignment of new wheat from Johnson County, Arkansas, reached St. Louis yesterday, and sold at the noon call at $4.50 per bushel, the highest price ever paid there. It consists of 100 sacks, is a little damp, but is plump and bright, and grades No. 2. From now on new wheat from a constantly-enlarging area will be coming into market. The farmers who have any old wheat unsold on hand would do well to bring it to market without delay, as prices will steadily recede for the next three months.

SO THE two million horse-power of the American Falls at Niagara is to be utilized in generating electricity for lighting, heating, and power purposes. The purchaser of the falls property, who is reputed to be a very skillful electrician, declines to describe his inventions or his process of generating force, perhaps because they are his own, and perhaps because he does not care to announce results before he is sure that he can accomplish them. He will have many obstacles to contend against, one of the principal being to overcome the loss of power by transmission of the current on the wires, and in his scheme his loss of power would be proportionately as large as the original source of power. It is well known that in transmitting electricity it loses force inversely in proportion to the distance it has to traverse, as in crossing the ocean for instance, where at either terminus it only produces a slight flash on a mirror. Electricians claim, however, that by the use of copper wires they can in some way overcome this. Certainly the Niagara Falls man will stand in need of some such help in transmission, and he will probably find numerous other obstacles standing in his path as he attempts to hitch up the American Undine. Let us credit him, however, with courage, and hope he will succeed. Other enterprises, at the outset apparently as impossible, have succeeded, and why not this? Telegraphing, telephoning, steam travel on sea and land, the loom, and the printing press a century ago would have been laughed at as we may now be inclined to laugh at the announcement that a man at Niagara is going to use the great cataract to light the streets and houses of Chicago, propel all its machinery, and desolate its coal and wood-yards. A century hence it may seem nothing remarkable, and the readers of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE of April 30, 1982, will probably find in that issue articles reflecting upon the conservatism of their century-old predecessors. Whatever readers today may think of this project, one thing is clear: Niagara Falls has too long been allowed to waste its tremendous power. It has not kept up with the general pace of the country. It ought to go to work and earn something. Let us hope the man has appeared who will secure that result.

THE Democratic and Independent newspapers of New York City have assailed Mr. Blaine for his conduct before the Foreign Affairs Committee with a ferocity which can only be inspired by baffled rage and hate. Some of these newspaper comments are disgraceful to their authors. They are founded on studious misrepresentations of what took place. They are not supported by the facts. Mr. Blaine's best vindication after all must be found in the very faithful and accurate stenographic reports sent to the New-York newspapers by the Associated Press. They have not been tampered with, as the official reports have been, by the shifty and unscrupulous Belmont. It will be impossible for any candid reader to find in the full account of the proceedings certified to as correct by the witnesses one unparliamentary expression or ungentlemanly word that fell from Mr. Blaine's lips. Yet the hostile press of New York, regardless of the refutation of their calumnies contained in their own dispatches from day to day, have been in full cry after him since the investigation began. Never was a public man so persistently lied about as he has been in this case. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that their malice is caused by the disappointment they feel in finding in his testimony so complete a vindication of the policy of the Garfield Administration and so severe a condemnation of the timorous, time-serving, un-American policy which superseded it.

THE deal in April wheat came to a close last evening. It has been one of the most successful corners, perhaps the most successful, ever known. The reason has been that the parties technically known as "longs" had practically nothing to contend with in the shape of arrivals from the country. During the past month the receipts of No. 2 wheat in this city were only about 160,000 bushels, or at the rate of less than two million bushels per year, where they recently exceeded thirty-four millions. And this in the face of the fact that there has been a premium of about ten cents per bushel all through the month, as compared with wheat to be delivered during the coming week. The people who persisted in selling short, and remaining short on an advancing market, when there was no wheat in the country to fill their sales, have simply themselves to thank for the loss. There is perhaps cause for thankfulness that the loss was no greater. The price during several days past has been $1.40. Had the longs advanced the figures to $2 per bushel the shorts would have been equally helpless to avoid paying or defaulting. Of course in that case the defaults would have been much more numerous than now. It is understood that less than 400,000 bushels remained undelivered last evening, which is not a large percentage of the whole. How big that whole is can scarcely be told; but there is reason to believe that the longs have bought and sold fully thirty million bushels altogether for April delivery.

THERE was a sort of understanding that something should be done about the saloon licenses after the city election. It was under this impression that the agitation of the subject was suspended. If the near approach of the election of Aldermen and the dread of opposition from the saloon element were the chief obstacles in the way of realizing a higher license fee, the friends of the measure were willing to wait a few weeks and humor the timorous candidates for reelection. But nothing has been heard of the matter since the election was held. There is nothing for the old Council to do now but canvass the votes and make way for the new Council. There is a widespread and we fear a well-grounded apprehension that the new Council will be no better disposed to increase saloon licenses than the old Council proved to be. It is to be feared that the Mayor will show no less cowardice than he has shown heretofore. Yet there will never be a time more favorable to an increase of fees for saloon privileges than now. There is an entire year before another city election occurs, and within that period the licenses may be raised, the collections begun, the city revenues enlarged, and the whole system established and accepted without any political disturbance. The new Council can do more to remove the unfavorable opinion which the people are inclined to entertain of it by promptly increasing the saloon-licenses to $100 for the privilege of selling beer, and $200 for the privilege of selling all kinds of liquor, than it will otherwise be able to do during its entire term.

GLADSTONE has turned a complete somerset on the Irish question. After six months of the coercion policy he finds that it is a complete failure. Agrarian crimes increase and multiply in proportion as the number of "suspects" are put in prison. The strike against rents spreads wider and deeper. The army of occupation has been increased to 50,000 regulars. Still the back rents are not paid. Twelve thousand evictions in eight months have not forced blood out of turnips, simply because there is none in them. The miserable, rack-rented tenants are unable to pay the present high rents and three years' crop-failure arrearages. The investigation of the House of Lords has convinced the Tories that rent-paying has not been promoted by imprisoning suspects and holding them in jail without a trial. Gladstone has known it for a long time. Both parties appear to have come to the same conclusion—that the present policy of cruel harshness must continue to be a failure. A complete change of policy has been resolved upon. Earl Spencer is to succeed Cowper as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, and will at once liberate Parnell, Dillon, and others. Buckshot Forster resigns and takes another place, to get out of the way of the new policy that is to be tried. A great land scheme is to be inaugurated. The estates are to be broken up and sold to the tenants on long time at low interest. The arrears of rent which have accrued since 1878 are to be capitalized and added to the price of the land, and the tenants, by paying 4 per cent a year on the price of the land for forty-six years, are then to own it in fee simple. These payments will be less than the rents they have heretofore paid to the landlords. It is admitted on all sides that the landlords must go. The cry is, Ireland must be owned by the Irish and land-monopoly must cease. After Ireland is liberated from the curse of feudal land-monopoly how long will the same system survive in England and Scotland?

EVERY man who has the slightest respect for law, right, or decency has reason to rejoice that the House of Representatives has in a most emphatic manner placed its condemnation upon the attempt of "Fort Pillow" Chalmers, of Mississippi, to usurp the seat of the negro Congressman, J. R. Lynch. At the election in 1880, Lynch, who is a bright mulatto, and one of marked intellectual ability and of education, was elected, confessedly by about 7,000 majority. The Bourbon election officers, however, rejected or threw out the returns from various districts, but they were unable to reduce his majority below 5,000. Resort was then had to a most disgraceful expedient. In some of the precincts and counties in the State the names of the various candidates on the ticket—and the ticket was a long one—were separated by the printer by the insertion of a slight dash between the titles of the various offices to be voted for. A law of Mississippi provides, as does that of Illinois, that no ticket shall be legal which bears any mark whereby, when folded, its character can be distinguished. On the pretense that these tickets, bearing a slight printer's dash between the lines on the inside of the ticket, were a violation of the law, enough ballots for Lynch were thrown out to give Chalmers a majority, on which he was returned, and he has been holding the seat since December last. Even at the South and in Mississippi this extraordinary fraud was condemned, but Chalmers has insisted at Washington that the Democrats should stand by him, even to the extreme point of leaving the House and suspending all business for the want of a quorum. But the case of Chalmers was too flagrant. The Northern Democrats refused to obey the Mississippi demand, and Chalmers was notified that he would have to be voted out and Lynch voted in. Many members were paired, but the result was not changed; the white usurper was voted out of the seat, and the colored man was admitted to the seat to which he had been elected by such a large majority.

THE sale of seats for the great May festival commences one week from tomorrow. The work upon the Exposition Building has progressed sufficiently to allow of public inspection, and the managers of the festival will throw it open to the public all this week. This will give people an opportunity to examine the auditorium and ascertain in what portions of it they would like to have seats, so that when they come to purchase they will not have the difficulty in selection which might occur if they chose from the plats. All the indications now are favorable to a large sale of season seats, and applications are coming in from all parts of the West. The crowd of strangers here during festival week will be immense. The rehearsals show that the chorus is in splendid condition and will give Chicago such singing as has never been heard here before. Of the soloists and orchestra it is needless to speak, for they have never been excelled at any festival, either in this country or abroad. As this festival is a matter of experiment to decide whether it is feasible for Chicago in future to hold a biennial festival, after the manner of Cincinnati, there ought to be no doubt as to her answer. There is nothing lacking on the part of the managers and performers to make it a great musical success. That is already guaranteed. The financial success ought to be no less. It is not a private speculation or investment. Its managers have been chosen from among our most prominent citizens, and its expenses have been guaranteed by sixty of our leading merchants and capitalists. Its expenses are enormous, and whatever profits accrue will be deposited in a fund for the benefit of the next festival. All its managers, as well as the singers, except the imported soloists, give their time and services. It is, therefore, a city celebration, and our citizens ought to support it liberally and enthusiastically. Chicago is not in the habit of being behind Cincinnati in other matters, and should not be in this, although the festival in Cincinnati will be the fifth that has been given there. No one questions that in a comparison of musical material and appreciation Chicago is ahead of Cincinnati. This is clearly enough shown by the fact that Chicago with her first chorus commences exactly where Cincinnati is now, after her chorus has had ten years of organization, discipline, and drill; and that whereas Cincinnati can furnish but ten or a dozen players to the great orchestra, Chicago furnishes forty. It now only remains to be seen whether Chicago can furnish such an audience as Cincinnati. The Cincinnati festival will be held in a hall having 3,500 seats, and the papers there are already boasting that every seat will be sold. The Chicago festival will be held in a hall containing 6,000 seats. Every seat ought to be sold if we would keep up the relative distance between the two cities in everything else.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENT ABUSES.

There is something wrong about the management of special assessments. Just what it is and whose fault it is it would be well for the Citizens' Association to ascertain. It is the uniform practice to assess largely in excess of the actual cost of the improvement. A reasonable margin above cost may be proper to cover the expenses of making the assessment and to meet any errors that may be found in the estimates; but excesses of 50 and 60 per cent above cost certainly cannot be excused on this ground. It is not a sufficient answer to say that rebates are made to the taxpayers of the sum collected over and above cost and expenses. Therein lies the hardship. If the improvement of a certain block is to cost $4,000, why should the taxpayers in that block be required to pay in $6,000 and thus turn over $2,000 of their money to the city for a year or more? As special assessments are paid by a large number of small property-owners and householders, the collection of 50 per cent more than is needed is generally very oppressive.

A couple of instances will serve to illustrate the abuse. The assessment for the improvement of State street was collected a year ago. On a 25-foot lot there was an assessment of $165, of which $65 was subsequently returned. But the rebate was not received by the taxpayer until one year after the assessment had been paid, and then only after calling for it several times and going through much tedious circumlocution. The taxpayer was forced in the first place to pay 65 per cent more than he ought to have paid, and somebody not entitled to it had the use of his money for a whole year. Another instance: An ordinance has been passed for the paving of Wabash avenue south of Twenty-third street with asphalt blocks. The assessment has been made at the rate of about $7.33 per lineal foot on each side of the street. The same kind of pavement was laid on Twenty-eighth street a few months ago at an actual cost of $5 per front foot. Why is the Wabash avenue assessment made nearly 50 per cent higher than the improvement ought to cost?

There is another significant feature about this practice. A large percentage of the rebates awarded after the improvements have been made is never called for. In many cases the taxpayers are ignorant of the fact that rebates are coming to them, and in others, where the rebate amounts to only a few dollars, the taxpayer, after running after it several times, gets tired out and allows it to remain. What becomes of the money which thus lapses? We presume that there is some process for covering it into the City Treasury. If so, does it all get there, and when and how? How long does some official draw interest on other people's money over and above the year which elapses between the collection of the special tax and the award of the rebate?

The practice of collecting an excess over the cost of improvements originated in the difficulty which was found some years ago in collecting all the tax, and then the people who paid their taxes were compelled to pay, in addition to their own, the taxes of others who refused to pay. But under the present system the entire amount of every special assessment is collected before the improvement is made. If the property-owner does not pay promptly the tax-buyer pays, but in every case the city receives the full amount of the assessment. Hence it is no longer necessary to raise the assessment to make good the deficiencies in collection. Indeed, it is not easy to imagine any good reason why more money should be collected than is actually needed, and certainly the collection of 50 or 60 per cent excess is without any justification.

These excesses in special assessments amount in the aggregate to a large sum of money, all of which lies in the City Treasury one year, as a rule, and a large part thereof much longer. The very fact that in each assessment there is too much money is a temptation to extravagance and corruption. Some means is usually found to devour a larger proportion of the money collected than economical management would have expended. Aside from this constant danger that money is wasted or stolen by the practice of excessive assessments, it is an injustice to taxpayers to exact more money from them than it is designed to use. The practice is vicious, and it ought to be reformed altogether.

REFORMING THE PRIMARIES.

In the political system of our country there is no more difficult and serious defect than that which is developed in the choice of local or municipal governments. This defect is not due so much to imperfections in the legislation by which these local governments are established as it is to the agencies which in all large cities are able to so corrupt and degrade the ordinary machinery of party politics as to place the active government of these cities in the hands of irresponsible persons seeking place and power for corrupt purposes, and, once in place, able by the use of their official means to perpetuate themselves in authority.

The party machinery by which are conducted the primary assemblages of the voters to express their choice directly in the nomination of candidates or in the choice of delegates for that purpose is seized by the corrupt and designing of both parties, and used for the nomination of candidates who ought not to be voted for. Once nominated, party allegiance is invoked, and every man is subjected to the accusation of treason and perfidy who hesitates to vote for a notorious thief who has packed his primary meeting. What is the honest voter to do? It is possible for him to vote for the candidate nominated by the opposing party, but in a great majority of cases the other candidate is a fellow of the same stamp or worse, because these corrupt factions play regularly into each other's hands, and leave the general public no room for discrimination. A Republican, who will make the proper endeavor, can obtain a nomination in his own ward, against the choice of his own party, by making a pecuniary arrangement with the captain of the Democratic faction; and when needed, the Democratic aspirant can have the favor fully reciprocated on like terms. The result of all this is, the management and operation of all local political machinery is exercised exclusively by the most disreputable of the population, and respectable men who ought to be placed in control of municipal affairs will not become candidates, and who if willing cannot be nominated. The mob—and by mob we mean the professionals—therefore control the election of all city governments, and city governments have generally become public scandals.

Purification in local governments must begin in the purification of local politics. It must be made as criminal an offense to vote illegally at a primary meeting held for the nomination of candidates by one party as it is to vote illegally at a public election, and it must be made as disreputable and as disgraceful to corruptly invade the primary meeting of a party as it would be to stuff the ballot-box or colonize a precinct with illegal votes at a public election. This extension of the State election-laws to the protection of political parties in the choice of their candidates and representatives, and the enforcement of their rules, must come from the Legislature, and that at an early day; but still there is much that can be done now, and which should be done before there is another general election in this city.

The primary meeting must be reformed or it should be abolished. Now it is a fraud, a delusion, and a cheat. But the voters of either party in any ward in this city have it in their power to take measures to reform primary meetings within their own jurisdiction. The Fourth Ward offers a case for illustration, particularly as that ward has of late experienced the disgrace and discomfiture of the present lawless system.

That ward at the Presidential election in 1880 polled 5,360 votes. This vote is in excess of the vote of any one of one-half of the counties of this State. In this ward there are eight precincts; the average vote of each was 670. The vote of the ward was divided, Garfield, 3,561, Hancock, 1,751. Now the rule has been that a primary meeting in that ward is called for three hours in the afternoon, and the 3,561 Republican voters are expected to gather from the eight precincts at one place. Outside of the ward, but in the closely-packed districts adjoining, there is a large available population that can be voted at any primary. This population pours in, and the hour for closing the primary is reached with a mixed vote in the box, of which possibly 1,000 more or less are genuine Republican votes of that ward.

With slight variations this is a fair picture of the primary meetings in all the wards of the city.

Can this be reformed? In the first place 3,600 votes cannot by any possibility be polled at any primary meeting, and, therefore, the practice of holding only one primary meeting in one ward must be abolished. Experience in all elections has shown that the failure to scrutinize the voting at any precinct is intensified in proportion to the reduction of the number of legal voters at that precinct.

When the Republicans of the Fourth Ward next want to hold a primary meeting, they can have a meeting at each of the eight precincts at which the legal Republican voters of that precinct can vote, and thus give every Republican in the ward the opportunity to vote, with ample time to do so. They can by rule fix a test by which every man not known to the judges can establish his right to vote at a Republican meeting, and also his right to vote in that particular precinct. At each of these precincts the judges of the election and those interested can have no difficulty in distinguishing between the Republican and the spurious voter, and it will be easy for the canvassers to protect the purity of the ballot-box even more carefully than can be done at a public election.

There are now perhaps as many as sixteen delegates to the convention to be elected on one ticket. This large number may have a decisive vote in the convention, and to secure them solid there is a desperate struggle in the ward. Now, if each precinct had two delegates (or one, two, or three, according to the size of its vote), the motive for cheating and corruption would be enormously decreased, and the election would pass off quietly and fairly.

The great result—the exclusive participation in the meeting by the Republicans, and a fair expression of the will of the majority—can thus be obtained, and, this result accomplished, there will be no difficulty in commanding the support of the whole party in the ward.

We have used the Fourth Ward as an illustration of what any of the wards of the city might do of its own motion in reforming the primary system. There are other wards where the vote is even larger, and in fact there is no ward where the same reform may not be accomplished if the effort be made. If the Fourth Ward will set an example in this respect, the public sentiment of the Republicans of the city will insist upon other wards doing what they can in the same direction.

Primary elections have under our political system assumed vital importance. All our officers—National, State, and municipal—are practically chosen at such meetings, and the purification of such meetings is essential to the purity of all elections. The political managers—and we include those of all parties—cannot employ the present summer better than in preparing some general and thorough system by which the disgraceful machinery of the present primary system may be put aside and something better substituted.

THE NEW GAS COMPANY.

There has been no great public rejoicing as yet over the passage of the ordinance granting to the "Consumers' Gas Company" the rights and privileges enjoyed by the old companies. The reason for the popular apathy with which the new movement has been received is because the people do not know what the "Consumers' Gas Company" is or what it actually intends to do. "By their works shall ye know them" is even more applicable to gas companies than it is to Christians. If the new company shall prove to be one of those fleeting concerns which mysteriously disappear after organization, then it will be concluded that some enterprising citizens and friendly Aldermen are the richer and the old companies the poorer for the transaction, and possibly that the consumers of gas will be required ultimately to pay the expenses of the transaction. If, on the other hand, the new organization shall proceed to expend $300,000 within the next eight months in the construction of works, and shall furnish evidence of a purpose to manufacture and distribute gas to an amount not less 10,000,000 feet every thirty days before three years shall have expired (and the ordinance requires both these things), then the public will herald the new company with acclaim.

There has been more than the usual amount of mystery about the passage of this latest gas ordinance, and several circumstances have combined to confuse public judgment as to the real object of its promoters. Several of the Aldermen who have heretofore been identified in the public mind with the interests of the old companies have been active in urging the passage of the ordinance for the creation of the new company. Nor have the old companies displayed their usual anxiety to defeat the ordinance. This has led to an impression that the old companies are in some way interested in the new scheme. But the managers of the old companies have been known to intimate that they believed the Standard Oil Company (which has been engaged in the erection of rival gas works in other cities) to be back of the present enterprise, and that they did not care to compete for the favor of the Council against a corporation controlling so long a purse. If this theory be correct, then the gas consumers of Chicago may feel confident that the new enterprise will not be suppressed.

In case the Standard Oil Company shall establish gas works in this city a very pretty fight may be confidently awaited. The public can stand that with much the same equanimity that it looked upon the war of passenger rates from the West to the East, which lasted several months. The ordinance limits the new company to a charge of $1.75 per thousand for its supply of gas. But from the time this new company shall begin to supply the territory now controlled by the present companies it will find it necessary to sell gas a good deal more cheaply. The companies now manufacturing gas have discovered uses for the residuum matter—the coke, tar, sulphuric acid, etc., which was formerly wasted—that enables them to sell the gas itself at a very much lower figure than they are now charging. They earn enormous dividends at the present rate of charges, and whenever they shall be compelled to lower the rate in order to compete for business they can put it down to a figure that will astonish even the Standard Oil Company. It is very evident from this statement that competition is needed, and the public can endure a considerable reduction in the price of gas without prejudice to the corporation that shall come in to compete.

SUCCESS OF THE IRISH STRIKE AGAINST TITHES.

We print elsewhere from the London Pall Mall Gazette a brief history of the vain efforts made by the British Government fifty years ago to enforce the collection of tithes in Ireland for the Episcopal Church after that form of taxation had become confiscatory and unendurable. Then Parliament and the Ministry had resort to "coercive" legislation, the taxgatherer was accompanied by the police and the regular soldiers, the parson carried with him in order to collect his tithes a detachment of dragoons and carried off the tenants' cattle under the protection of the bayonet and the cannon.

The tithes were imposed by the Government for the support of the English Church in Ireland, and the Church was a constituent branch of the Government, as much so as the judiciary or the army. It was true the Established Episcopal Church in Ireland was a Church with but a handful of adherents. There was a full quota of Bishops and priests, of deans and chapters, and prelates of all degrees, but the parishioners were comparatively scarce. Had the collection of tithes been limited to the members of the Episcopal Church the revenue would have been small and the exaction insignificant; but the payment of tithes was general; the Presbyterian and the Catholic were alike subjected to tithes to support a church establishment which for the most part consisted of clericals without parishioners, except the land bailiffs, tax-collectors, and officials of the British garrisons. The Irish masses endured it as long as was possible, but when at last it was a question of starvation or paying tithes there was a general protest against the plunder. The only relaxation that was permitted was the privilege of commuting for money the tithing of the produce, but it was as difficult to pay in money as it was in cattle, or meal, or potatoes, and the law authorized the Episcopal Church authorities, where the tithes were not paid in money, to distrain the cattle and the crops. Finally there was a general strike; all denominations in Ireland protested against the tithes demanded by the Established English Church, and there was a united determination to pay that tax no more. The then Government undertook to collect the tithes for the Church, but the attempt was a failure. Coercion laws were enacted; laws for the punishment of conspiracy were passed; the military were ordered to enforce the law, to seize property, carry off cattle, shoot down the resistants. The jails and prisons were crowded with persons arrested for passive resistance or under suspicion; violence begot violence; illegal killing and shooting followed with striking rapidity the legalized shooting by the police and the military. Bailiffs and agents marshaled processions to seize the food, the cattle, the crops of the farmers to pay the tithes, and the shooting of bailiffs and agents became a matter of course. The British Ministry plied coercion, and conspiracy, and sedition laws upon one another, but the results were not changed, and at the end of five years the Ministry was as powerless as ever to collect Episcopal tithes from the Catholics and Presbyterians in Ireland. After prolonging the struggle fruitlessly until 1838 the Government was compelled to abandon the tithe system by consenting to a small commutation. After nearly ten years of bitter warfare, in which perhaps a thousand lives were sacrificed and thousands of persons driven to famine and expatriation, the British Ministry had at last to confess coercion a failure.

This history is now reproduced in the English papers to show that the British Ministry is confronted at this time by precisely the same condition of facts that it was fifty years ago; that the tithe question in 1831 was of the exact character of the back-rent or arrears of rent question of 1881. The same coercive measures have been adopted in 1881–'82 that were tried in 1831–'32, with no prospect of any more success. The fact is, the Irish people were not able to pay the Episcopal tithes in 1831, and they are not able in 1882 to pay the landlords the back rent which accumulated during the famine and distress seasons of 1876–'79. The accumulated rents of those years have to be paid in order that a tenant may avail himself of the benefits of the Land bill, and the 150,000 tenants who are not able to pay these arrearages are in no wise benefited by that act.

RALPH WALDO EMERSON.

This man was recognized as the representative mind of his country, and he is dead—dead at the age of 79 years; dead with a purer and more enduring fame than is often the meed of mortal man. How rare he was; how original in thought; how true in character. Those who lived below his mental sun called him the "sphinx of letters." Mediocrity comprehended him not. Only those whose intellectual home was on the highlands enjoyed the privilege of journeying with him into the "rich estates of an original genius." Poet, lecturer, essayist, and philosopher, his contributions to our letters have been priceless. What other writer has given us such stately sense, splendid diction, sprightly wit, happy humor, keen criticism, subtile insights, noble morals, and vigorous thought, "fresh with the breath of health and progress"?

To him we are largely indebted for the change in our methods of thinking which the last decade has marked. He preached the gospel of tolerance, but so persuasively, so unaggressively that the fiercest bigot was won over. Even the "hornets of divinity" at last gave him room on their shelves. It was this gentleness of reasoning, this sweet courtesy or hospitality toward the opinions of others, that made his blows so sure and effective. Both in conversation and in writing he avoided the least intrusion of himself. Where is there so impersonal a writer?

Idealist? Yes, and yet remarkably realistic as well. He was not a metaphysician, and laid no claim to systematic thinking. He did not deal in logic. His pages are like handfuls of jewels, each one pure and bright, but sustaining no relation to the others. His method of work was utterly without design or plan. As his thoughts shaped themselves in his mind he dropped them into his notebook, and on some favorable day sorted them into collections. His chapters read backward as smoothly as forward. There is no beginning on a lower grade and leading up to the highest mount. A friend said of his work, "'Tis Iris-built. Each period is self-poised. Jewels, all: separate stars!" This original method of composition makes Emerson's works seem like fragments of improvisations from many hands. Bronson Alcott says:

> His compositions affect us, not as logic linked in syllogisms, but as voluntaries rather, as preludes in which one is not tied to any design of air, but may vary his key-note at pleasure, as if improvised without any particular scope of argument, each period, paragraph being a perfect note in itself, however it may chime with its accompaniment in the piece, as a waltz of wandering stars, a dance of Hesperus with Orion. His rhetoric dazzles by its circuits, contrasts, antitheses; imagination, as in all sprightly minds, being his wand of power.

Emerson's poetry has been the despair of many critics, the stumbling-block of benighted readers. In construction it is choppier, more unrhythmic, and more defiant of poetic canon than even Walt Whitman's. Yet he is unmistakably a poet. The spirit of poesy pervades his every thought, though the accepted form of poetry has received most disrespectful treatment at his hands. Theodore Parker said he was "a poet lacking the accomplishment of verse." One of his biographers calls him a "moral poet"—a rare figure in the passionate Castalian throng. He did not love beauty merely for its own sake, and had no sympathy with the word-flourish and dilettanteism which are often the disgrace of popular poets. He was introspective, an interpreter of human motives, an intellectual rather than sentimental poet. Emotion and passion are not prominent in his poetry. He has feeling, but gives it no astonishing outbursts. He had a theory of poetry and he carried it out to the consternation and confusion of mediocre minds. It is that mind is central, the source of infinit unity; that the outward world is symbolical of the spirit expressed through it. In poetry as in all else with him the thought was everything, the form nothing. He believed it best for the poet

> To mount to Paradise
> By the stairway of surprise.

Emerson's life was not eventful. It was destitute of the dramatic features we are fond of associating in our minds with genius. He lived in his thoughts and lived for composition alone. In his youth he knew poverty well, but it was only the poverty which pinches the body, not the brain. Never was an embryo genius surrounded by greater riches of refinement and cultivation. The child of eight generations of cultured, conscientious, and practical ministers, each generation holding the most advanced positions in religious thought, "he was," says a loving friend, "such a man as might be looked for from such an ancestry." He himself was the embodiment of his own question, "How shall a man escape from his ancestors?"—a query he makes more difficult of solution by this assertion: "In different hours a man represents each of his several ancestors, as if there were seven or eight of us rolled up in each other's skin—seven or eight ancestors at least—and they constitute the variety of notes for that new piece of music which his life is." At the age of 10 he was described as a "slight, spiritual boy in blue nankeen." We are all familiar with the picture of his mature face, with its high, handsome head, well-formed, large nose, strong chin, and gentle but searching eye. In figure he was slender, in manner refined and courteous, with what is called a "reserved personality."

There is always a virtuous curiosity to know as much as possible about the persons whose minds have touched our own with quickening power. There is not much to tell of Emerson beyond what we find in his thoughts. Forty years ago he published his first book, and since then has read his lectures in cities and in villages to large companies of distinguished persons and to humble audiences all over the United States, in Canada, and in England. He has earned a lasting fame, but has always been far from rich in worldly possessions. Mr. Alcott said of him: "He is only a traveler at times professionally—prefers home-keeping; is a student of the landscape, of mankind, of rugged strength wherever found, liking plain persons, plain ways, plain clothes; prefers earnest people; shuns egotistic publicity; likes solitude and knows its uses."

He is said to have had an affection for conversation, and those who had the pleasure of talks with him described the experience as "sallies into cloudland." He never disputed the charge of being deficient in critical or purely literary judgment, and Lowell has said that the artistic range of his mind was narrow. He liked a book for its affinity to his own mind. He expressed the most extravagant delight in Montaigne's essays, declaring that it seemed to him he had written them in some former life. The Rev. George Cooke says: "To Emerson a book is great and precious only in proportion to its ethical, inspiring, and human power—its capacity to touch and mold man to finer issues of conduct and feeling." His task in literature was often a surprise to others. He liked Tennyson, but said of him: "He wants rude truth; he is too fine."

It was Emerson's belief that we create our own world by the purification of our own souls; that every spirit builds itself a house, and beyond its house a world, and beyond its world a heaven. In the world he saw a remote and inferior incarnation of God, and in every landscape a part of His face.

We cannot think of him as dead, though he is through with the mortal life of man. For him that "divine dream," the world, is ended, and in the fulfillment of his faith he is awake to the glories and certainties of day.

NIAGARA IN HARNESS.

Yankee ingenuity and practicality have not been slow in acting upon the suggestions which have been thrown out so frequently of late by the English savants as to the capabilities of Niagara Falls in producing electrical power. They have computed the force of the falls and announced the prodigious results in illuminating and heating, as well as a motor, which might be accomplished by them if they were only utilized, and now comes an enterprising American, backed by sufficient capital, determined to see if the cataract will perform what the savants say it will.

The preliminary step has been the purchase of the twelve acres known as Prospect Park, adjacent to the falls, which substantially gives the purchaser the control of the water-power of the entire American Falls, estimated at 2,000,000 horse-power, or ten times the amount of steam horse-power in Chicago and all the rest of Cook County—a force equal to that of 12,000,000 men. The control of this prodigious power having been obtained, it is proposed to erect immense buildings and ponderous machinery upon the brink of the falls, where the water can be easily reached, "to be returned after use." After generating the electricity by this unlimited hydraulic force, it is to be conducted through properly insulated cases to sixty-five prominent American cities and towns for illuminating purposes, and is also to be used for operating machinery and ultimately for heating purposes. Altogether there will be 10,000 miles of copper cables with machinery to correspond.

The project at the first glance is sufficient to take away one's breath, but it is certain that any project proposing to handle Niagara Falls must be on the same scale as the cataract itself. Niagara is not a force to drive a pretty mill or run a small grist. Its prodigious force must be handled in a Titanic way or else let alone. He would be a rash man who should hasten to predict that this colossal scheme, which looks so well on paper, is going to succeed, or that Niagara is going to allow itself to be harnessed to dynamo machines without a most determined resistance, or that numerous unforeseen obstacles will not turn up that will prove insurmountable and convince puny man that Nature has some agencies like mountains, oceans, cyclones, and cataracts which she will not allow to be utilized for material purposes, and against which she may protest in some reckless way that will send the whole project to everlasting smash. The most that can be done now is to announce that an effort is to be made to compel this vast 160 foot fall of water, which has been running wild so long and benefiting no one, except the falls hackmen, who have mainly retired on fortunes after their connivance with the cataract, to do something for a living and to be of some use in the world. If every brawling little millstream in the country has to be of some service there is no reason why this overgrown and monstrous precipitation of water should not also contribute to the wants of men—if it can be done. If skill, courage, enterprise, and money are of any avail, it may not be long before the world will behold Niagara no longer plunging over its brink merely for the profit of hackmen and the pleasure of sentimental sight-seers and poets, but working with its huge power for the comfort of people. It was not long ago that an English writer sneeringly declared that a Yankee could not look at Niagara Falls without calculating its capacity as a water-power. The writer probably never dreamed that a Yankee, not content with the mere calculation, would actually attempt to put it in operation.

CAN'T George W. Kroll, of the Third District, be persuaded to go away from his new groggshop long enough to vote for the Senatorial Apportionment bill? He has thus far acted in the most inexcusable and disgraceful manner, and shown himself utterly unworthy of the representative trust reposed in him by a Republican constituency. He is prompt to draw $5 a day, or $35 a week, for neglecting his duty and absenting himself from his post without leave. By what authority does he filch $35 a week out of the State Treasury while spending his time dealing out liquor to loafers in his groggery? It was a great mistake ever to have elected such a scalawag to the Legislature.

GOV. PLAISTED, of Maine, is attempting to punish Judge Libbey, of the Supreme Court of that State, for his refusal to sanction the Garcelon steal in 1879. The Judge's term has just expired, and although he is a Democrat and his reappointment has been requested by the bar of the whole State, the Governor stubbornly refuses to reappoint him. The Executive Council, which must confirm all appointments, declines, although it is Republican, to be a party to Judge Libbey's degradation, and has already rejected one of the Governor's nominees for the place. It has another nomination now before it, which will doubtless share the same fate.

THE official inauguration of the completed railroad system of which the St. Gothard Tunnel is a part has been fixed for May 21. The rejoicings at Milan, Lucerne, and elsewhere will occupy five days. It is now stated that not King Humbert, but either the Duke of Aosta or the Duke of Genoa, and probably a Prince of the German Imperial House, will take part in the festivities.

DURING the past winter three citizens of the Bohemian Town of Neustadt met every night for social purposes in the public room of the best inn. The triumvirate of friends were the Judge of the District Court, Franz Rychlik, Kapellmeister Bauer, and a merchant named Kohn. One evening in a merry humor they swore a common oath to remain united in death as well as in life, and each member of the guild pledged himself that, if one of the brotherhood died, he would follow him into the invisible world within the space of fourteen days at the longest. The landlord, who took the oath for a mere joke, wished to be made a fourth in the league, which was granted. As all the men were under middle age and in sound health, they felt secure that the first death was a long way off. About six weeks ago, however, the District Judge, Rychlik, died in his sleep from the poisonous fumes of a defective stove in his bedroom. The three survivors were deeply grieved, but none of them regarded the oath made under the influence of wine as anything more serious than an evening's passing jest. Twelve days later, however, the merchant Kohn was seized with inflammation of the lungs from a neglected cold, and in two days he was dead. A horror laid hold upon the two survivors, and the Kapellmeister Bauer took to his bed, lay ill for seven days, and died on the tenth day. At last accounts the landlord was still in good health, though terribly oppressed by the fear of sudden death.

THE Congressional delegation from Maryland is likely to be changed somewhat by this year's elections. The Democrats have now five of the six members, but the dissensions which have been spreading in the party during the past two years have weakened it so that only two of the districts are considered safely Democratic. These are the First and the Third Districts. The Republicans look upon the Second, Fourth, and Fifth Districts as debatable and will make an earnest effort to carry them. They now hold the Sixth District, and no Democrat but Montgomery Blair thinks of contesting it.

A REPORT comes from Georgia that both the Senators from that State think of resigning. Senator Brown is troubled with a lung affection, and the cancerous trouble of Senator Hill has long incapacitated him. In the event of their resigning Judge J. M. Crawford, of the Supreme Bench, and Gen. Henry R. Jackson are mentioned as gentlemen whom Gov. Colquitt would be likely to appoint to the vacancies. The Governor, it is supposed, will be a candidate himself for one of the Senatorships when the Legislature meets.

How sweet to sit at noontide's hour
Beneath the lilac tree,
And watch the slowly-budding flower,
And sing, O Spring, of thee.
Trot out, O Tityrus, my flute,
And e'en my tuneful lyre—
Unhand the throttle of my flute—
Lead out the shepherd choir,
And let the ewes and lambkins stand
In dumb surprise on every hand,
While all the hills and valleys ring
With our apostrophe to Spring.

"Pull up your pants, papa."

Aristides McGuire heard these words as they came from the ruby-red lips of Gwendolen Mahaffy and floated to his ears on the softly sighing and sensuous breezes of a June evening. He looked, and saw the pretty feet and shapely ankles of Gwendolen as she picked her way carefully along the muddy crosswalk. He noted the tenderly solicitous tones in which she addressed her father, and that tone thrilled his very blood.

Weiss-beer would also have done it, but Aristides was not so fly as he might have been.

Scarcely knowing why he did so, the young man followed the girl and her father, until finally they turned up Ogden avenue, and, as Gwendolen headed southwest and stood for an instant with her polonaise fluttering in the wind, she turned to her companion and said: "Ours is next to the last house on the street, isn't it, papa?"

"Yes, my darling," replied the old man.

"How long is this street?" asked Aristides of a policeman.

"Five miles."

The young man entered a neighboring saloon and sat down with a dull thud. "I love her madly," he said, "but, Heaven help me, I am not Charles Rowell."—From "Too Far for His Feet," by Murat Halstead.

PERSONALS.

Wendell Phillips has lately taken a house in Boston as old-fashioned and almost as retired as the one from which the work of city improvement has driven him after long years of quiet possession.

Now that Daniel Webster's widow is dead, the Webster annuity fund is to be distributed to the subscribers or their heirs. Among these Nathan Appleton, Robert G. Shaw, Samuel Appleton, and William Appleton contributed $2,000 each.

Roswell Smith, purchaser of the Century magazine, has given $1,000, half the cost of a chapel at Oceanport, near Long Branch, to be named the Roswell Inness Memorial, for Mr. Smith's grandson, the son of George Inness Jr., who died recently.

Allan Arthur, the President's son, has a grand passion for pretty Maude Crowley, daughter of the Representative from Lockport, and is said to haunt the Crowley parlors at the Arlington morning, noon, and evening, bringing daily to his inamorata a lavish bouquet from the White House conservatories.

Since Mr. Parnell's return to prison the Kyrle Society has applied to the Government for permission to adorn his cell at Kilmainham with sage-green curtains, dados, blue pottery, and other objects dear to the esthetic soul, but Philistine Forster sternly refused to allow the virgin expanse of Government whitewash to be touched.

Uncle Rufus Hatch has been visiting Bermuda. A day or two ago he wrote an article for the New York Commercial Advertiser, which the Commercial Advertiser pronounces very "strong," and maliciously insinuates that its strength is due to the influence of Bermuda onions, of which Uncle Rufus is known to be very fond.

The Chinese Minister at Washington appears at official receptions in a garment of plum-colored satin with collar of blue velvet worn over a robe of white silk brocaded with circles and dragons, and the black satin cap always worn indoors. The gentle Princess Frederica, of Hanover, has been forgiven by her mother for the enormity of marrying a mere Baron. Her brother and sister, however, are not to be reconciled. If the German Government restores, as it is now supposed it will do, to the children of the late King of Hanover the enormous private fortune of their father, Princess Frederica will become the possessor of a comfortable fortune of $2,500,000.

Senator Aldrich has introduced a bill to bestow a pension upon Mrs. Kady Brownell, of New York, "late daughter of the regiment of Capt. Day's Company, First Regiment of Rhode Island Detached Militia," who was regularly mustered into the service of the United States, and, though a woman, followed the flag of the Union, was wounded in the line of duty at the first battle of Bull Run, and received an honorable discharge, signed by Gen. Burnside.

The late Dante Rossetti never exhibited more than two of his pictures in London, though they were occasionally seen in provincial towns. It is a curious fact that, though they were so seldom seen in public, he should have received a reputation scarcely inferior to that of the most popular favorite of the day. As an artist he was extraordinarily sensitive to criticism. Mr. Rossetti had lived for some years in what might be called almost absolute seclusion so far as the outer world was concerned, although to the last he loved and enjoyed the society of his relatives and his intimate friends. Owing to his seclusion and to a strangeness of manner sometimes observable in him, an impression had gone abroad that the poet and painter was suffering from at least some form of intermittent insanity. There was, however, no truth whatever in the common belief. Mr. Rossetti had suffered during many years from that most exhausting and tormenting of physical evils—habitual sleeplessness; and he had often to make free use of chloral in order to get some degree of rest. Those who happened to see him when under the influence of conditions like these, and who were not acquainted with the real facts, were possibly led to believe that his reason was giving way.

Particulars of the Terrible Steamer Explosion of Friday.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 29.—Full particulars are received here today of the terrible explosion of the steamer Marion yesterday, on Wateree River, with an excursion party of ladies and gentlemen on board at the time. The Marion was employed by the Government in removing obstructions from the river, and for some time past had been running up and down the stream, and the officers and crew had become

WELL ACQUAINTED AND POPULAR WITH THE PEOPLE living upon the river-bank. During the past week a number of young ladies and gentlemen living in the upper end of Richland County decided to organize an excursion party for a trip down the river, and sent a committee to the Captain of the Marion with the request that he would grant them the use of the steamer, with which request he courteously complied. The party took the steamer yesterday morning at 9 o'clock, there being

TWENTY-THREE LADIES AND TWELVE GENTLEMEN, and they started off with glad anticipations of the pleasure of the day. Besides the excursion party, the crew numbered ten persons, making the steamer's load of living freight forty-five. At 11 o'clock, when the steamer was in midstream, the boiler exploded with a fearful noise. At the time the entire excursion party was on the deck, and all of them in the immediate vicinity of the engine-room. The scene when the smoke of the explosion died away was

FEARFUL AND BEGGARED DESCRIPTION.

For one moment the dense cloud of escaped steam hung over the débris, and men and women were senseless and bleeding upon the torn deck. Others had been thrown into the hold, and others still were buried under broken planks. The steamer was at first almost thrown over on her side, but she righted herself. Such of the male passengers and crew as had not been disabled went manfully to work to save the wounded and helpless women. The steamer was headed for shore, and, before she could sink, was run into shallow water. The force of the explosion

BLEW OFF THE ENTIRE UPPER DECK.

Many of the passengers were thrown into the water, but many more fell back on the deck, some being seriously hurt and others being only slightly bruised. The Captain and crew did brave work in saving the lives of the unfortunates, and but for their prompt action the victims of the disaster would have been trebled. The saddest feature of the explosion was the Misses Henry, four sisters, who were among the most loved and popular young ladies in Richland County. They had been standing on the deck directly over the boiler, and the explosion spent its full force upon them. The youngest, Miss Alice, was killed instantly. Miss Minnie, the oldest, was thrown a great distance into the air, and fell into the water. She was one of the first picked up, and died in fifteen minutes. The third, Miss Jane, was picked up in the end of the hold, nearly every bone in her body broken. She lived long enough to the young gentleman who lifted her mangled body. The fourth, a lovely brunet of 18, was so scalded as to be almost unrecognizable. Mr. Arnold Stiles, a middle-aged gentleman, one of the organizers of the excursion, was killed, his arms being torn from the body. John Jacobs and Hiram Tiller, two colored boat-hands standing in the rear part of the steamer, were killed, it is supposed, by falling timbers. Col. James Dushelles and Mr. Lawrence Adamson, who were standing near the Misses Henry, were also killed. Three other young ladies were also lost. One of them was

THE ABSOLUTE EXTERMINATION OF A WHOLE FAMILY,

TO MURMUR "THANKS"

TO HAVE BEEN MARRIED NEXT FRIDAY.

The number of persons killed or fatally wounded will reach eleven. The extent of the injuries of many others cannot be definitly fixed yet. The Town of Columbus was the nearest point at which succor could be gotten, and the presence there of one of the crew created the wildest excitement, and a relief expedition was at once organized.

THE CORONER'S JURY

this evening rendered a verdict of accidental death, and exempted the officers of the boat from blame.

Explosion in a Railroad Torpedo Factory.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CINCINNATI, April 29.—About half-past 8 o'clock this morning an explosion occurred in the railroad torpedo and percussion cap factory of C. Mumm, in Dayton, Ky., opposite this city. Mr. Mumm, who at the time was the only occupant of the factory, was engaged in the composition of some explosive, when from some cause as yet unknown a loud explosion took place, blowing the windows out of the building, destroying considerable property, and burning Mr. Mumm so seriously that his life is despaired of. The hair was completely burned from the unfortunate man's head, and his sight is probably destroyed. A physician who was at once summoned wrapped the victim's body in cotton saturated with sweet-oil. About three months ago a similar explosion occurred at this factory, resulting in the dangerous wounding of Mr. Mumm's boy and a boy named Havelin, who have just recovered from their injuries.

Victims of the Golden City Steamboat Disaster.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 29.—The dead bodies of a man and a woman, supposed to be victims of the Golden City disaster, were recovered yesterday—one at Cow Island, eighteen miles below here, and the other at Burdeaux Point, sixty miles below. W. F. McIntyre, Clerk of the ill-fated steamer, leaves this afternoon to identify the remains.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 29.—Local Inspectors Garrett and Ralston have completed the investigation of the case of the Golden City, which steamer burned here March 30. They find the vessel was provided with a full complement of officers and crew and equipped with all the fire-extinguishing apparatus and life-saving appliances required by law. They hold that the vessel, in carrying jute without the same being covered with bagging, violated the spirit of Sec. 4,472, Revised Statutes, and revoked the license of the mate. After the fire was discovered the officers put forth every exertion to save the passengers, and are held blameless for the loss of life.

The Terrible Work of a Switch-Engine.

DES MOINES, Ia., April 29.—While a balky horse was standing at the crossing of the Burlington Railroad, in East Des Moines, at 9 o'clock this morning, the wagon, containing five persons, was struck by a switch-engine, and a colored bricklayer named McGuire was killed, and a man named Graham, the latter white, mortally hurt. A child had a leg broken, and two women in the wagon were hurt.

Coal-Boats Sunk at Pittsburg Yesterday.

PITTSBURG, Pa., April 29.—A sudden rise in the Monongahela caused a wild current and the sinking of several coal-barges. The Coal City broke loose first and sunk a Walton barge and fuel-boat, with 15,000 bushels of coal. Also 20,000 bushels in barges belonging to J. S. McDonald and others. The Lud Keefer sunk a boat and barge with 30,000. At the mouth of the Allegheny the Clipper struck a sunken barge and sank in eight feet of water. The present rise will let out about 6,000,000 bushels.

LOVE LAUGHS.

The Stern Parents Refused Consent, and the Young People Announced Themselves Secretly Married.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., April 29.—Mr. John Aspinwall, a wealthy New Yorker, arrived in town last evening, accompanied by Miss Laura Elderkin, daughter of a prominent physician of this city, who returned from a visit East. This morning the consent of the parents was asked for the marriage of the pair, and the Doctor refused. Legal advice was called and the couple informed that on account of the young lady's being under age the wedding could not take place without the consent of the parents. The truants then told their secret—that they were quietly married in New York in March last, and only came home to celebrate the occasion, and returned to New York on the first train. The affair creates quite a stir in our circles.

THE BEST EVER MADE.

It is not "press opinions," nor "press influence," nor business "ring" influence that has made the Hallet, Davis & Co. the most popular and most renowned of all modern instruments of music. It is their acceptance by the critics of the world, the composers of the world, the professional pianists of the world, as the best piano ever made, that first gave them so wide, so universal, an adoption, and it is the satisfaction they have rendered on nearly a half-century's service that make their fame everlasting. The reputation that buds in the morning and blossoms at noon will fade in a day. Fame is a plant of slow growth.

BUSINESS NOTICES.

Arend's Kumyss should be the reliance of the physician in all those cases of debility in which prompt improvement of the general tone is imperative. Kumyss is the blandest and most easily digested food, and as such the best nourishment for a weak stomach; at the same time, through the process of fermentation which Kumyss undergoes, medicinal qualities are developed which we vainly look for in materia medica. In nausea, vomiting, extreme cases of dyspepsia, Kumyss acts like a charm, promptly relieving all the distressing symptoms of such cases. When the stomach rejects all else, Kumyss is retained and assimilated, affording the patient nourishment, strength, and comfort, and, as a logical consequence, nervousness ceases and refreshing sleep follows. In scarlet, intermittent, gastric, and typhoid fever, Kumyss is the best diet. It satisfies thirst and hunger and allays the fever. Kumyss has considerably the advantage over drugs, in that it never can do harm. To dose an irritable stomach with drugs is an absurdity which no intelligent physician attempts in this day. But not only in extreme cases should Kumyss be resorted to; it should be the chief remedy for a weak stomach under all circumstances. The dyspeptic brain-worker with a few glasses of Kumyss a day will improve his digestion and his nerve-force. Ladies would be less nervous, more vigorous, and healthier-looking if they would add to their daily diet a few glasses of Kumyss.

Send for treatise on Kumyss. Beware of imitations.

Arend's Kumyss is not sold to the trade, but to consumers only.

BUSINESS REMOVALS.

A Large Number of Firms Seek More Spacious Quarters.

Where Many Prominent Houses Are Hereafter to Be Found.

THE GUARANTEE COMPANY OF NORTH AMERICA,

well known in business and railroad circles, has moved into more commodious apartments at 208 La Salle street. This company, the oldest and most reliable in its line in America, and indeed the only company in the United States confining itself entirely to the guarantee business—is a novel, at the same time a most valuable form of surety. Its purpose is to guarantee the fidelity of employés (many railway companies, corporations, firms, etc., taking no other surety), the business being largely increased as the character and value of this surety becomes known to the general public. The company is ably represented by Mr. E. D. L. Sweet, a name familiar to the business-public throughout the country through his long connection with the Western Union Telegraph and other companies. Mr. Sweet's energetic management promises to increase the popularity of this form of surety.

STUDEBAKER BROS.,

the carriage and wagon manufacturers who have occupied the stores 151 and 153 Wabash avenue so long, have moved to their new store, northeast corner of State and Jackson, occupying the four stories and basement with a fine stock of their goods. This move has been made for the better accommodation of their many patrons and in order to obtain increased facilities for doing their rapidly-growing business.

W. D. LAHEY.

Mr. W. D. Lahey, the popular restaurateur, will on the 1st of May remove his branch business at 59 Dearborn street to his main establishment, at No. 12 South Clark street. F. D. COSSITT.

The real-estate office of Mr. Cossitt, of La Grange, will be removed May 1 from 71 to 85 Washington street (Rooms 5 and 6). La Grange property is very active, and some choice lots near the depot are offered on most favorable terms.

The hide and leather establishment of A. B. Lapham & Co. remove from 243 and 245 Lake street to 137 and 139 Kinzie street, northwest corner of La Salle, where they will continue their business in all its branches with increased facilities. THE HOUSE.

A COLORED MAN GIVEN HIS RIGHTS AND A "HAUGHTY SOUTHRON" UNSEATED.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—The last four days in the House have not been wasted, although to many people it may seem that more time than necessary has been given to the preliminary discussion of the Lynch-Chalmers contested election case. There is no doubt that every member of the House who possesses ordinary intelligence had long ago made up his mind how he would vote, and there is also no doubt that a good many Democrats who voted against ousting Chalmers today did so with a mental protest. A good many refrained from voting at all. When the House assembled this morning all the members now in Washington were present, with one or two exceptions. The galleries were well filled, and consequently Calkins, who closed the debate, had a large and interested audience. The case is one which has given a great deal of thought and study, and his speech today, which lasted nearly two hours, showed that his time had been well employed. As a legal argument in favor of Lynch's title, the speech left nothing to be desired. The point made, even by such astute lawyers as Hammond, Carlisle, and Tucker was left untraversed. Calkins had the right on his side as well as the law in all its spirit and force, and he took full advantage of the situation. It is not too much to say he carved for himself today a place in the very front rank among debaters in the House. He was many times interrupted by Democrats, but never disconcerted, and his retorts and repartees were quick and telling.

HIS SPEECH

did good to Democrats as well as to Republicans, and many of the former said afterwards that they sympathized fully with most of his argument. Some passages of his speech rose to the dignity of eloquence, and provoked hearty applause, and when Calkins finished he was greeted by an outburst of applause from the floor and galleries such as has not been bestowed upon any member of the House before this session. There was an evident disposition on the part of some of the Democrats to filibuster against the vote. The yeas and nays were called on the resolutions offered by Moulton from the minority of the committee, declaring Chalmers entitled to the seat, and they were lost by a vote of 104 to 125.

ALL THE GREENBACKERS

who were present, except Ladd, of Maine, voted with the Republicans, as also did Fulkerson and Paul, Readjuster Democrats. When the vote was taken on the resolution declaring Chalmers not entitled to a seat, that gentleman was seated on one of the outer rows, and just before the vote was declared a page rushed up to him and secured his autograph in an album. That was the last time Mr. Chalmers will sign his name as a member of Congress for some time to come. The vote on this resolution was 124 to 71, many Democrats refraining from voting.

HOOKER, OF MISSISSIPPI, and some others among the Southern Democrats have been making strong efforts, instigated by Chalmers, to induce their party associates to filibuster against the resolution declaring Lynch entitled to a seat. They were a disturbing element in the small caucus last night, but were overruled. When the vote came on the resolution to seat Lynch, however, on a division, only eighteen Democrats voted. The yeas and nays were then ordered, and about the same number of Democrats voted on the first call of the roll. Randall, Springer, House, and others busied themselves among their party friends, and on the second call most of the Democrats fell into line, voting in the negative. Before the result was announced and left the hall. The resolution was then adopted by a vote of 125 to 83, and then Klotz, of Pennsylvania, undertook to make a motion to adjourn before Lynch could be sworn in. This did not succeed, and Lynch came forward to the Clerk's desk, escorted by Calkins. As he made his appearance there was loud applause on the floor and in the galleries. Lynch was then sworn in, and again the roll of the House of Representatives bears the name of a colored man. Within five minutes Lynch had cast his vote with the Republicans against a motion made by the Democrats to adjourn the House before some necessary business could be transacted. Ellis, of Louisiana, a Democrat who has shown a disposition to oppose the Bourbons, voted for the resolution to seat Lynch. He was the only Democrat who had the manliness to vote against his party associates.

CHALMERS TOOK HIS HAT

THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL has at last passed both Houses of Congress and will be approved next week. Yesterday the Senate agreed to the report of the Conference Committee, and this afternoon the House also concurred in the report. The delay has been caused by a failure of the two Houses to agree upon the item making an appropriation for special mail facilities on trunk lines. The House originally granted $500,000 for this purpose, and the Senate increased the appropriation to $650,000, also providing for a ratable distribution of the money among different cities. As finally agreed to, the bill appropriates $600,000, and invests the Postmaster-General with discretionary power to use the fund. There was a short debate in the House when the conference report was presented. Mr. Springer spoke against its adoption, and the Democrats voted against it. Some little difficulty was experienced in securing a quorum, but the report was finally agreed to without a call of yeas and nays.

THE HOUSE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

now meets at 9 o'clock daily, and expects to finish the River and Harbor bill next week, and to bring it into the House for passage the week following. It was at first expected the bill would be open for debate and amendment, but the amount is so large that it is now expected that the attempt will be made to pass it under suspension of the rules. It is said that the amount proposed to be appropriated exceeds $10,000,000. The only chance for the passage of undoubtedly rests in its being attached to this River and Harbor bill. The committee has not yet come to a decision upon that subject. The condition of affairs in the House is peculiar. The Republicans have followed the Democratic precedent, which they so vigorously denounced in a former Congress under Democratic rule, and have appointed a Caucus Committee of Safety. The theory is that this committee shall designate the order of business, and the House has been working for two weeks practically under its direction. The program is, now that the Chalmers case has been disposed of, to proceed with the Tariff-Commission bill until finished.

THE HENNEPIN CANAL BILL

THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

served notice today upon this Caucus Committee that, after the passage of the Tariff bill, they shall demand the floor for appropriation bills, and shall insist upon holding it until they are all passed. This, of course, will be resisted by members who are interested in a great number of important measures upon the calendars, as there can be no doubt that when the appropriation bills are once passed it will be impossible to keep members here, particularly when the hot weather will come to their aid as an argument for their adjournment.

REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE R. DAVIS has succeeded in passing through the House his bill to refund certain duties paid upon military uniforms imported for the use of Company G, Sixth Regiment Infantry, Illinois National Guard. The Committee on Ways and Means, in reporting the bill favorably, some time ago, gave the facts in the case, which are that the members of the company provided themselves with a dress uniform for parade and occasions of ceremony. The uniforms they selected were of Scottish pattern, they being the sons of Scotchmen, and were not to be obtained in the United States. They were purchased in Scotland at a cost of $890, and the duty charged upon the goods was $480. In view of the fact that the Illinois militia is uniformed at the expense of its members, and disciplined at their cost in loss of time, the committee were of the opinion that the members of Company G should not be compelled to pay the import duties on their dress uniform, and recommended that the amount paid be refunded to them.

THE CHINESE BILL,

with the Senate amendments, was received in the House this morning, and will be considered at an early day. There is no doubt of the concurrence of the House in these amendments, which are merely formal, most of which are designed only to improve the phraseology of the bill. The friends of the bill are beginning to speculate as to its fate, and some of the more apprehensive fear that it possibly may be vetoed. They are saying that the President never stated that he would sign a ten-year bill, and that all the declarations to that effect are without authority. Some of the California people, however, who have excellent means for information, are very certain that the bill will be approved. One of them pointed to the fact that David Davis voted for it, as indicating that it would almost certainly be signed by the President. There is little doubt that the counsel of Judge Davis has greater influence with the President than that of any other Senator. He voted against the other Chinese bill.

MILLER.

After the Chinese bill passed the Senate yesterday, Senator Miller went down to Fortress Monroe. He will not return until Tuesday. His reason for not speaking on the Chinese bill was to hurry it through as much as possible. Several Senators who do not agree with him as far as the Chinese bill is concerned, have complimented him on his management of the bill in the Senate. The bill was sent over to the House today and, on its arrival Page moved a concurrence in the Senate amendments. Hooker, of Mississippi, objected, and the proceeding requiring unanimous consent it went over. Page gave notice that he will renew the motion on Monday, when it will be in order and unanimous consent will not be necessary. The admission of Lynch, from Mississippi, puts the first colored man in the House that has been there for six years. Lynch was formerly a member of the House.

PROCEEDINGS.

To the Western Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Mr. Page moved concurrence in the Senate amendments to the anti-Chinese bill. Mr. Hooker objected, and Mr. Page gave notice that he would ask its consideration Monday.

A resolution was adopted to send a sub-committee to New York to take testimony in the Chili-Peru investigation.

The House resumed the consideration of the contested election case of Lynch vs. Chalmers. The previous question was ordered, and Calkins took the floor to close the debate.

MR. CALKINS

spoke for nearly two hours, and was frequently applauded by his party friends. In conclusion, he reviewed the benefits granted the colored people by the Republican party, and assured that people that the party would continue to educate them, and, standing by them in each advancing step in civilization, would invoke God's blessing upon them and their children. The conclusion of his speech was greeted with loud and long-continued applause on the Republican side and in the galleries, in which a large number of colored men were assembled.

The vote was then taken on the resolution of the minority of the Committee on Elections, declaring Chalmers to be entitled to retain his seat. This was rejected—yeas, 104; nays, 125—a party vote. About thirty pairs were announced on this vote.

The question then recurred on the first resolution of the majority,

DECLARING CHALMERS NOT ENTITLED TO HIS SEAT.

At first there was a disposition shown on the Democratic side to refrain from voting, and on the first roll-call not more than twenty Democrats voted, among them Randall and House, Tucker, Carlisle, and Holman. This, however, was enough to make a quorum, and upon the second roll-call the remaining Democrats cast their vote in the negative. The resolution was adopted—yeas, 124; nays, 71.

The second resolution, declaring Lynch entitled to the seat, was agreed to—yeas, 125; nays, 83.

Lynch then appeared at the bar of the House, escorted by Mr. Calkins, and the oath of office was administered to him by the Speaker.

Mr. Caswell presented a conference report on the Post-Office Appropriation bill, which was agreed to. The report states that the amount of money in dispute between the Houses was $440,000.

The Senate recedes from amendments amounting to $330,000, while the House agrees to amendments amounting to $110,000. The franking-privilege amendment is rejected and the amendment increasing the appropriation for special mail facilities agreed to, with an amendment so as to read as follows: "For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines $600,000, said facilities to be extended so far as practicable to the principal cities of the United States."

Without transacting other important business, the House adjourned.

KILBOURNE'S VERDICT.

THE VERDICT SET ASIDE BY JUDGE MC-ARTHUR AND EACH PARTY GIVEN TIME TO MAKE NEW MOTIONS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Judge McArthur set aside the verdict of $100,000 damages rendered in the Kilbourne case for false imprisonment, on the ground of excessive damages, and gave each side twenty days in which to make further motions.

BELMONT.

THE YOUNG MAN STILL SELF-SATISFIED.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Mr. Belmont does not think any better answer is needed to the rumor that he intends resigning from the Foreign Affairs Committee than the fact of his appointment on a sub-committee designated to take evidence in New York. The other members of this sub-committee are Messrs. Kasson, Dunnell, and Wilson. They will leave here next week, after the examination of Senator Blair is concluded, and take the testimony of Mr. Bliss, of the firm of Morton, Bliss & Co., and of Robert Randall, who is sick in New York, relative to the contract negotiated by Mr. Randall for the firm with the representatives of the Crédit Industriel. Mr. Blair will tell his story Monday, and it will not be of great importance, save as corroborative of much that Mr. Blaine has said.

THE STAR ROUTES.

INGERSOLL STRINGING IT OUT.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—The proceedings in the case of M. C. Rerdell, a member of the star-route ring, before the Police Court, bid fair to continue for an interminable length of time. The complaint against the prisoner consists of eighty pages of printed matter, being the indictment against him that was quashed because of a failure to correctly name the accused. In the confession originally made by Rerdell, he named a number of routes. The defense has insisted that all the papers relating to those routes on file at the department should be produced and read, regardless of their relevancy, and it would not be surprising if twenty days were occupied before a decision is reached. It is possible, however, that the defense may abandon its dilatory proceedings.

ONE MORE INDICTMENT

in the star-route cases has been quashed on the ground of a misnomer. It was that of Mary Catharine Armstrong, who was indicted as Kate M. Armstrong. This is the person whose attorney told the Court she was not a cook, but is a contractor with two unfinished contracts. This is the second indictment drawn up by Ker, the attorney imported specially from Philadelphia on account of his great skill in framing indictments, which has been quashed. The Government announced its purpose to reindict Miss Armstrong. Judge Wylie decided that the attempt of the defense to inquire into the proceedings of the grand jury on the ground that the indictments are founded upon insufficient evidence, could not succeed. "I can't open that door," said the Court, "because I think it is an imputation upon the grand jury to go into the question at all. My mind is settled on some things, and that is one of them. You may set that down as a point in these proceedings irrevocably determined, so far as this Court is concerned."

BANK CHARTERS.

THE FRIENDS OF THE BANKS TAKING HOPE.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Mr. Randall expresses great confidence in the adoption next Monday of a special order fixing the time for consideration of the bill to extend National bank charters. More than usual interest attaches to this vote, for the reason that it is believed that the vote upon the motion to fix a special day will be equivalent to the passage of the bill in some form, as the votes that have already been taken upon this subject show that the measure has a very considerable majority in its favor when a direct vote can be reached. The attempts to make this special assignment have been defeated on two previous occasions by Democratic votes. The Democratic leaders feel the effect of this, and the remonstrances which the

DEMOCRATIC BUSINESS-MEN

from all parts of the country have sent to Washington have not been without influence. Mr. Crapo, Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who has the bill in charge, has never abandoned the effort to secure consideration of this measure, but since the last defeat he has been aided by the Democrats, Randall and Flower. Mr. Randall said today that their efforts had been so successful that he did not think even a roll-call would be necessary. He had shown the proposed plan to Mr. Bland, of Missouri, who has been most determined in his opposition, and the latter said that, while he could not vote for the assignment, he would not oppose it. This statement indicates that the opponents of the bill will not resort to filibustering, as they have threatened to do. Mr. Randall is in his belief that the opposition will be so inconsiderable that a roll-call will not be in order. However, the reasonable confidence of the friends of this measure that the day for a hearing will be set appears to be well founded, and their belief that the assignment of a day will be equivalent to the passage in some form of a bill which will authorize the extension of National bank charters is scarcely less well founded. Controller Knox sent to the House today a copy of his letter to one of the Cincinnati National banks containing suggestions as to the manner as to which banks can reorganize under the existing law. The letter will be found elsewhere.

MUCH TOO ENTHUSIASTIC

ARTHUR WORRIED.

HE FEELS THAT HIS REVERSAL OF BLAINE'S POLICY HAS BEEN A MISERABLE FAILURE.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27.—It rests on good authority that Arthur keenly realizes the weakness of his Administration in the management of foreign questions. His greatest regrets relate to mistakes of that discription. He constantly feels that irreparable false steps have been taken. It is the only branch of his Administration which gives him special concern. With smooth sailing things may go along well enough, but who is able to say what storms may arise? He feels that, somehow, he got on the wrong side of the South American question, became uselessly tangled and drawn into an unsatisfactory position. That he realizes this is creditable to his sagacity. That he knows what is the weak spot in his Administration is in his favor. Precisely how to strengthen himself is the question that causes concern. The repairing of damages is out of the question. The recent correspondence about the imprisoned American "suspects" may prove satisfactory, but chiefly because of the attention which he himself has given to the matter. The President ought to feel that the Department of State, of all others, is being ably managed, and that no mistakes are liable to be committed.

IN FRELINGHUYSEN

he has respectability without the special capacity which ought at all times to preside there. When, awhile ago, Arthur remarked that appointments which he took least time to consider had proved his greatest mistakes, he specially referred to the State Department. There evidently was a distrust that the New Jersey statesman might prove unequaled to the duties. To supply the deficiency J. Bancroft Davis was induced to abandon the Bench of the Court of Claims to become Assistant Secretary. Somehow it has not worked. There was foundation for the rumor that Den would go back to his old seat on the bench of the Court of Claims. He either was not permitted to supply deficiencies or was unequal to the task, which latter people having good opportunities for reaching conclusions will not believe. The policy, or want of one, by the Arthur Administration in the eyes of ordinary people contrasts strangely with the pronounced ideas of Mr. Blaine. Whatever the critics of this gentleman may say,

THE AVERAGE SENSE OF THE COUNTRY IS WITH HIM

in declaring a distinctive American policy, qualified by extreme apprehension of consequences. Of the two the policy of Mr. Blaine is least likely to involve the country, in spite of all that his critics may say. There is a probability that Arthur's management of the question relating to American "suspects" under arrest in Ireland will be found to be sufficiently urgent. How much of this fact is really due to the lesson drawn from previous mistakes regarding Chili is only a matter of inference. But it may be stated as a fact the tone of the correspondence, resulting as it is likely to in the release of the "suspects," is due as much as anything to the attention which Arthur himself has given to the question—a fact that renders it plain enough why Secretary Frelinghuysen is far from realizing the idea of the President. The New Jersey statesman was the selection of Mr. Conkling, with whom in the Senate he was a favorit. In fact, he was one of the few Senators with whom the imperious Roscoe did not quarrel. Had he done so it is probable Arthur would not be experiencing his present difficulty concerning the Department of State. The present Secretary of State is a gentleman of respectability and wealth, besides being the son of a gentleman who once ran for Vice-President with Mr. Clay for President. Had the name been a less distinguished one—distinguished for nothing that fills ten lines in permanent history—Gen. Arthur's Secretary of State would doubtless have been chosen for his known abilities rather than for the accidental and superficial fame of some of his ancestors.

OF COURSE, FRELINGHUYSEN CAN BE GOT RID OF

only by promotion, which would be sending him to England. As to that, Arthur has other views. It would be throwing away his best card. Lowell will be recalled whenever Arthur feels he is taking a trick by appointing his successor. It might prove no small matter to find one to fill the post of Secretary in a way at all comparable to Blaine, the object which Arthur will attempt to accomplish. It is significant that men are incidentally canvassed in Administration circles with this reference, and without eliciting much light. More than ever is it realized that Blaine is a hard man to match. In discussions of this sort Conkling is mentioned, only, however, to be dismissed as the eliminated. Thus Frelinghuysen's tenure is materially affected by the difficulties in finding a better.

A BIG SENSATION.

AN ATTEMPTED SUICIDE AT THE JAIL—THE REPORT THAT THE ASSASIN HAD KILLED HIMSELF.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—There was a sensation here this morning over a report that Guiteau had committed suicide. The rumor came with such positiveness that a number of persons who heard of it visited the distant jail. The fact proved that a man named Wilson, who is in jail on a charge of playing a confidence game in selling pianos, and who, it was discovered today, is wanted in New Jersey for a murder committed there, did try to commit suicide, and very nearly succeeded. He was confined in the cell adjacent to Guiteau, and was nearly lifeless when discovered. Guiteau not only was not dead, but the reporter found him in the crowd giving instructions how to resuscitate his almost lifeless neighbor. It was a grim spectacle to see giving directions to the jailers as to the best means to save one from strangulation. The jailers say Guiteau has shown no indications of any desire to take his life, and he probably will not until after the decision of the court on the bill of exceptions shall have been rendered, and the prisoner knows that his death on the gallows on June 30 will be certain. Then, some of his keepers think, he will lose his courage and try to escape the rope by suicide.

THE PRESIDENT'S MURDERER

INDIAN POLICY.

ALL THE SENTIMENTALISTS HARD AFTER TELLER—LECTURE OF GEN. ARMSTRONG LAST NIGHT.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—Gen. Armstrong, who is an enthusiast on the subject of Indian education, with other philanthropists, is fearful that the new Secretary of the Interior may reverse the Indian policy which has for some years prevailed. He has come to Washington to impress upon the President the necessity of continuing in the present course. The first step was to deliver a lecture, at which the President and his Cabinet were invited to be present. The lecture was delivered tonight at the house of Col. Hopkins, of the Court of Claims. There were present a number of Senators and members of the House, including Senators Allison, Saunders, Hawley, and Hoar and Representatives Robeson, Morse, and Robinson, of Massachusetts. Ex-Secretary Blaine, Secretary Lincoln, Justice Strong, and other distinguished individuals were present. Prof. Cushing with two of the Zuni Indians, were also among Gen. Armstrong's audience. While dealt principally with the training-school system and its results, the lecturer touched incidentally upon several other features of Governmental policy in dealing with the Indians. He spoke of the cost of keeping a military establishment on foot to watch the Indians, and gave it as his opinion that the better method of controlling the Indians would be to appoint good men as Indian Agents, pay them good salaries, and make their positions permanent. The poor remuneration of the agents and the uncertain tenure by which they hold their offices at present militated against their efficiency. He believed, also, that the merits of missionary work among the Indians had been detracted from an account of its recent connection with politics. He dwelt largely on benefits of the training-school system as conducted at Hampton and Carlisle, and said the influence of the Indian youth educated at these schools and then returned to their tribes was good, and was making itself felt among the Indians.

THE PRESIDENT AND SECRETARY OF WAR

had a conference of a very different character this afternoon upon the Indian question, the result of which was that three more regiments, two of infantry and one of cavalry, were ordered to the scene of hostilities in Arizona. This will increase the number of troops there to six regiments. The General in command has been instructed to pursue the savages with the utmost vigor.

ARIZONA COWBOYS.

TEXT OF THE MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT ASKING AUTHORITY TO USE THE ARMY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 27.—The following message from the President was sent to Congress this afternoon:

To the Senate and House of Representatives: By recent information received from official and other sources I am advised that an alarming state of disorder continues to exist within the Territory of Arizona, and that lawlessness has already gained such hold there as to require a resort to extraordinary means to repress it. The Governor of the Territory, under date of the 31st ult., reports that violence and anarchy prevail, particularly in Cochise County and along the Mexican border; that robbery, murder, and resistance to law have become so common as to cease causing surprise, and that the people are greatly intimidated and losing confidence in the protection of the law. I transmit his communication herewith, and call especial attention thereto. In a telegram from the General of the Army, dated at Tucson, Ari., on the 11th inst., herewith transmitted, that officer says that he hears of lawlessness and disorders which seem well attested, and that the civil officers have not sufficient force to make arrests and hold the prisoners for trial or punish them when convicted. Much of this disorder is caused by armed bands of desperadoes known as cowboys, by whom depredations are not only committed within the Territory, but it is alleged predatory incursions made therefrom into Mexico.

In my message to Congress at the beginning of the present session, I called attention to the existence of these bands, and suggested that the setting on foot within our own territory of brigandage and armed marauding expeditions against friendly nations and their citizens be made punishable as an offense against the United States. I renew this suggestion. To effectually repress the lawlessness prevailing within the Territory a prompt execution of the process of the courts and vigorous enforcement of the laws against offenders are needed. This the civil authorities here are unable to do without the aid of other means and forces than they can now avail themselves of. To meet the present exigencies the Governor asks that provision be made by Congress to enable him to employ and maintain temporarily a volunteer militia force to aid the civil authorities, the members of which force to be invested with the same powers and authority as are conferred by the laws of the Territory upon the peace officers thereof. On the ground of economy, as well as effectiveness, however, it appears to me to be more advisable to permit the coöperation with the civil authorities of a part of the army as a posse comitatus. Believing that this, in addition to such use of the army as may be made under the powers already conferred by Sec. 5,298 of the Revised Statutes would be adequate to secure the accomplishment of the end in view, I again call the attention of Congress to the expediency of so amending Sec. 15 of the act of June 18, 1878, Chap. 263, as to allow the military forces to be employed as a posse comitatus to assist the civil authorities within a Territory to execute the laws therein. This use of the army, as I have in my former message observed, would not seem to be within the alleged evil against which that legislation was aimed. CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

NOTES.

THE JOHN SHERMAN "LITERARY BUREAU."

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.—The committee which for some weeks has been investigating the stationery division of the Treasury Department of which A. L. Sturtevant is chief, has concluded its labors and submitted its report. The inquiry originated in the request of Mr. Sturtevant, that the Secretary of the Treasury should ascertain the facts as to the box of stationery which it was testified before the Sherman investigation had been sent from stationery division to the "Sherman Literary Bureau." The result has been to show that the box was a box for Warner Bateman, sent from Cincinnati to the Treasury, addressed to John Sherman for the use of the "Literary Bureau," to be stored, and that whatever it may have contained, it did not contain any stationery from the Treasury Department. The committee report that the stationery division is conducted in an excellent manner; that an account of stock is regularly taken, and that everything is properly accounted for.

OBITUARY.

Death of Mr. J. J. Sullivan.

About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon John J. Sullivan, well known in this city and elsewhere as an actor, died at Mercy Hospital of consumption, from which disease he had been suffering about a year. Mr. Sullivan was born in Boston in 1846, went upon the stage while only a youth, and soon became a favorit with the Boston public, playing in nearly all the theatres of that city. His first engagement outside of the place of his birth was in 1874, when Manager R. M. Hooley, of this city, engaged him to play leading juvenile parts in his comedy company. Mr. Sullivan remained with Mr. Hooley two seasons, and then went to New York, where he played as a member of the Union Square company and other organizations two seasons. He then married Katie Putnam and traveled with her until 1880, when a divorce parted them. At the beginning of the present season he began an engagement with McKee Rankin in "The Danites," assuming the part of The Parson. While the company was filling an engagement at Hooley's Theatre in this city last December, the malady from which Mr. Sullivan had been suffering for several months assumed so dangerous a form that he was forced to abandon stage life and seek relief in a Southern climate. He spent the winter in Florida, but finding his condition not improved came to this city two weeks ago, entering Mercy Hospital immediately upon his arrival, and continued to fail until death ensued.

A sister of the deceased actor left Boston for this city yesterday morning, and until her arrival no arrangements regarding the funeral will be made.

CAMERON'S REBELLION.

Meeting of the "Commission" of Stalwarts and Independents at Philadelphia Last Night to Patch Up a Peace—Nothing Done.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

PHILADELPHIA, April 29.—The committees representing the two factions of the Republican party in this State, appointed to harmonize existing differences between the Cameron and Mitchell wings of the party, met tonight at the Continental Hotel and were in session three hours without arriving at a definit understanding. Wharton Barker, Extreme Independent, was allowed to preside, and the Stalwarts throughout showed every disposition to make any reasonable concession as to a reform of party methods. The Independents also were unexpectedly tractable, and the general understanding seemed to be that the functions of the commission did not embrace any steps towards forming a ticket. On behalf of the Independents a protocol of reform in party management was submitted. Then there was a free discussion, without any hard words on either side, and in perfect good temper the commission adjourned until Monday afternoon. Wolfe, Independent, and Quay, Stalwart, say that peace and party unity are probable. Senator Mitchell was present at the conference for a few moments. Senator Cameron is said to be in the city as a guest of Wayne MacVeagh, but he did not come to the Continental, where the conference was held.

VANDERBILT BOMBS.

A SENSATION IN PLUTOCRATIC CIRCLES—IGNORANT NIHILISTS BENT ON INJURY TO VANDERBILT AND FIELD.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The Times of tomorrow will contain the following singular story: Seven leather pouches filled with mail sent from the general post-office were brought into Branch F, on Third avenue, between Twenty-eighth and Twenty-ninth streets, about 4:20 o'clock yesterday afternoon. They had been conveyed from the City-Hall Station, on the Elevated Railroad, in charge of a messenger, and, as the latter delivered them to Superintendent Alonzo Mosier, of Branch F, it was observed that one of the pouches was smoking. Thinking that a box of matches had been ignited, as frequently is the case in the transmission of mail-bags, Mr. Mosier quickly unlocked the bag and emptied it of its contents. A lot of letters and parcels, blackened, but not burned, rolled out upon the table, and with them the wreck of

A SMALL GLASS BULB.

The tube and the bulb contained a liquid which was supposed to be fulminate of mercury. Carefully lifting the powder-can out, Mr. Pearson found that an ordinary gun-powder fuse was protruding from a hole punched near the cap, and it was of sufficient length to form quite a coil. In very close proximity to the glass tube and bulb fastened to the latter were strong blue silk ribbons, which extended back along either side of the can and formed a loop at the further end by which the drawer could be opened.

THE CAN

contained about half a pound of gunpowder. The method by which the makers of these infernal machines had hoped to carry out their malignant designs was at once evident. Ignorantly presuming that Messrs. Vanderbilt and Field would undertake to open their boxes personally, the wretches had planned that, as the ribbon loop at the end of the drawer was pulled, the glass vessels containing the combustible liquid would be detached from the upper end of the box and crushed against the top of the powder-can, igniting the fuse and causing an explosion. It is extremely doubtful whether one of

would have sufficient power to inflict any dangerous bodily injury on the person opening it, but, whether slight or serious, the injury inflicted, even had the two boxes reached their destinations, would probably have been inflicted on some innocent subordinate. Had the concocters of this Nihilistic scheme possessed the average amount of intelligence they would have known

POSTMASTER PEARSON.

The Postmaster received the notification at his residence about 6 o'clock, and went without delay to the branch office. The facts stated above were narrated to him. After removing that portion of the wrapper containing the address, he had the unopened box placed in a vessel of water. He then examined the mail-bag, and found that there was a rent about five inches long on one side of it, and upon inquiry learned that a muffled explosion had been heard to emanate from the pouches which were piled upon the front platform of the front car, just after the elevated train had left the Ninth Street Station.

THE THEORY

that naturally suggested itself was that the messenger, in moving the bags about, or possibly in treading on them, had violently jarred the infernal machine and caused it to explode. After keeping Mr. Field's mysterious package in soak for four hours Mr. Pearson took it out and proceeded to open it. The softened pasteboard was easily pulled apart, and a powder-can similar in size and shape to the one that had exploded was disclosed to view. It was embedded in cotton, and was lying with its bottom toward the end of the drawer that pulled out first. At the upper end of the box was a curious contrivance. A small glass tube in the shape of a "V," wide at the top, was fastened lightly by flimsy brass clamps and pulley to the pasteboard, and connected with it was

A SMALL PASTEBOARD BOX

and a good-sized gunpowder canister. The top of the canister had been blown off, and it was evident, at the first glance, that an infernal machine had been prematurely exploded. The Superintendent picked up the top of the box and read the address, printed with a lead-pencil in legible but awkward letters.

"W. H. WANDERBILT, ESQ., 459 FIFTH AVENUE, CITY."

The box had evidently been manufactured for holding cigarets or toilet soap. It was about seven inches long, five inches wide, and two inches deep, and was what is known as a drawer-box, the box proper being pulled out of its case like a drawer. Its color was dark blue, and upon the top was a fancy chromo portrait of a dashing female. The wrapper was of ordinary buff manila paper, neatly folded around the box and sealed at each end. To the left of the address were pasted five 10-cent postage stamps. With the bits of pasteboard and canister Mr. Mosier also picked up small bunches of blackened cotton, bits of glass, and some pieces of ribbon. He laid them one side, and, looking further among the contents of the pouch, found a box of exactly the same size as the one that had been destroyed wrapped in the same kind of paper addressed to

"CYRUS W. FIELD, ESQ., CORNER TWENTY-FIRST STREET AND LEXINGTON AVENUE, CITY."

This address was written with ink, in a somewhat cramped hand, upon the back of a yellow envelope which had been pasted on the wrapper. There were also five 10-cent postage-stamps, placed almost exactly in the same relative position as the stamps on the box addressed to "W. H. Wanderbilt." This second box Mr. Mosier carefully placed where it could do no harm, and sent word to that men in Messrs. Vanderbilt and Field's position are not in the habit of opening their own mail. They do not examine it at all, much less bother themselves with opening it. The lateness of the hour at which the discovery of this attempted mischief was made of course prevented Postmaster Pearson from making a very thorough investigation of the matter. He, however, was able to tell from upon the boxes that one of them had been brought in by a collector and the other dropped into the proper receptacle on the Park-row side of the Post-Office. Both, therefore, had been mailed in the First District, and the time stamps on them showed that they were mailed between 3 and 3:30 o'clock. The pouch containing the two boxes was loaded, together with six others, into the wagon and taken to the City-Hall Elevated Railroad station a little before 4 o'clock.

IT IS A CURIOUS FACT that in the box addressed to "Mr. Wanderbilt" was found a small piece torn from the bottom of a German newspaper. As this was displayed in the Postmaster's office one of the reporters of a German paper promptly exclaimed: "Why, that is a piece of the Volks Zeitung, the Socialists' paper." This discovery led to a closer scrutiny of the boxes and their contents, and, picking up that piece of the wrapper taken from Mr Field's intercepted package which contained the address, the Times reporter pulled its pasted folds apart and saw the address, "No. 311 East Nineteenth street," written in pencil. Mr. Pearson thereupon wet the paper, and after a while was able to pull the pieces sufficiently apart to reveal the full address of the Superintendent of Police.

"G. W. WALLING, NO. 311 EAST NINETEENTH STREET, CITY."

Of course all of the gentlemen present immediately jumped to the conclusion that the miscreant who addressed the box to Mr. Field had at first thought of sending it to Superintendent Walling. When asked if he had informed Messrs. Vanderbilt and Field of their threatened danger, the Postmaster said he had. He considered it no more than right to let those gentlemen know what had been attempted. Neither of them, he said, manifested any nervousness in consequence of the information thus imparted to them.

"DID MR. FIELD FIND FAULT with you for intercepting his mail?" asked one of the reporters.

"Oh, no," laughingly replied Mr. Pearson. "I guess he felt more like thanking me for so doing."

This is not the first occasion that infernal machines have been sent through the post-office in this city. One was sent to Andrew H. Green when he was Controller, and one was sent to the Spanish Consul here a few years ago. Postmaster Pearson proposes to make a vigorous and thorough investigation of this affair at the earliest possible moment.

SARAH BURR.

THE USUAL CONTEST OF THE WILL OF A PUBLIC BENEFACTOR.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—There is to be a contest of the will of Sarah Burr, who died not long ago after bequeathing about $3,400,000 to various religious, charitable, and educational societies in this city and elsewhere. Miss Burr was the last of three sisters. The other two before dying bequeathed to her a life interest in their estate, with a promise that at her death she should divide the property to institutions of the classes mentioned. There are about ninety of these institutions named in the will, and among them are the divinity school of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Philadelphia, the Society for Aged and Infirm Clergymen of the Episcopal Church in the State of New York, the Society for the Widows and Orphans of Clergymen of the Episcopal Church in the State of New York, the Missionary Society for Seamen of the Episcopal Church in the State of New York, the American Seamen's Friend Society, the New York Tract Society, the American Colonization Society, the Protestant College of Liberia, and the Young Men's Christian Association of this city.

THE CONTESTANTS

are John H. Corcwell, Sarah Tredwell, Josepha B. Clark, Aleonden Townsend, Mary E. Hewlett, John H. Tredwell, Mary W. Tredwell, Maggie S. Jackson, John T. Townsend, and Ann Augusta Carpenter, heirs at law and next of kin to the testatrix. The general grounds of contest are that the will and codicils are not the last will of Sarah Burr; that Sarah Burr did not sign the same in the presence of each or either of the attesting witnesses; that she did not acknowledge her signature to the witnesses, or declare the document to be her will; that each of the witnesses did not sign at the request of the testatrix; that, at the time of the alleged execution of the will, the testator did not have testamentary capacity, and was not competent to make a will, and the will and codicils were not the free act of the testatrix, but were all and each

PROCURED BY FRAUD,

circumvention, and undue influences, practiced against and on the testatrix by some person or persons unknown to the contestants. Objections are then made to each and all of the bequests to public institutions contained in the will and codicils, upon the specific grounds that, in many cases, an attempt is made to create a trust not authorized by law, that many of the corporations specified cannot take by devise; that many of them already hold as much property as their charter and the laws of the State of New York permit, and the assent of two-thirds of the members of each branch of the Legislature was not given to the bills creating a member of the societies named in the will. Objections are also made on the ground of misnomer.

SERGT. MASON.

CHICAGO'S MONSTER PETITION FOR HIS PARDON OUTDONE.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The petition prepared by the Garfield Club of this city asking the President to mitigate the sentence of the court-martial in the case of Sergt. Mason was taken to Washington tonight by a committee of the club. The petition is over a mile long and is computed to have nearly 175,000 signatures. Almost every State in the Union is represented in the list of signers. There are many names from California and other Pacific States, and the Southern States are well represented. In one village in Georgia the petition received the signature of every inhabitant except two. A petition received today from Missouri bore the name of Gov. Crittenden. Elmira and surrounding towns sent 5,000 signatures. It is proposed to present the petition on Monday, unless the writ of habeas corpus in the Mason case applied for in the United States Supreme Court is granted on that day.

EMINENT ENGLISHMEN.

TO ARRIVE TONIGHT.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The steamship Gallia, of the Cunard Line, which left Liverpool on the 22d inst., is expected to arrive here tomorrow night. Among the passengers are the Duke of Manchester and Lord Mandeville and his son, Lord Randolph Churchill and Lady Churchill, Lord Elphinstone and the Count and Countess Montsaulnin. William Drago Montagu, seventh Duke of Manchester, was born at Kimbleton Castle in 1823, and married in 1852 Comtesse Louise D'Alten, who was Mistress of the Robes to the Queen from February, 1858, to June, 1859. Lord Elphinstone, fifteenth Baron and representative Peer of Scotland, was born in 1828, succeeded his cousin to the title in January, 1861, and married in 1864 Lady Constance Murray, daughter of the Earl of Dunmore. Lord Randolph Churchill is only 33 years of age. He is the second son of the Duke of Marlborough. As a leader of the fourth party, Lord Churchill has recently become one of the most familiar figures of the English political world.

COMING IN HORDES.

FOUR THOUSAND YESTERDAY, 70,000 THIS MONTH, 136,646 THIS YEAR SO FAR.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Five steamships landed 3,972 immigrants at Castle Garden today. They were the Suevia, with 1,003; the Thingvalla, with 697; the Persian Monarch, with 607; the Stella, with 688; and the Mosel, with 977. These figures swell the number of immigrants landed this month to 67,901, and it is probable that the number landed tomorrow will make a total for the month of more than 70,000. The number landed since the 1st of January is 136,646. For the same period last year the arrivals were 105,322. Superintendent Jackson, of Castle Garden, said this morning: "The failure of the Legislature to make the necessary appropriation of $250,000 to carry on the work of this department places us in a very gloomy position. If the appropriation is not made the work will be carried on as heretofore, either by private subscriptions or in some other way, and the State will be held responsible for the debts thus incurred."

A WEDDING.

A DAUGHTER OF THE LATE THEODORE ROOSEVELT MARRIED TO MR. DOUGLAS ROBINSON JR.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Miss Corinne Roosevelt, daughter of Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, was married this afternoon at the Presbterian church, Fifth avenue and Fifty-eighth street, to Mr. Douglas Robinson Jr. Over 2,000 invitations were issued to the church. The bridesmaids were: Miss Roosevelt, sister of the bride, Miss Grace Parish, Miss Maud Elliott, Miss Lucy Tuckerman, Miss E. Moran, Miss E. Caron, Miss Frances Smith, and Miss A. Murray. They wore dresses of white silk, trimmed with lace, and with long trains. The first four carried forget-me-nots and lilacs, and the last four bouquets of Duchess roses and lilacs.

THE BRIDE'S DRESS

was a rich cream-white Duchess satin, very long train, round cut, trimmed at the edge with pipings of satin. The front was one mass of pearls, with pearl fringe on box pleatings, hip paniers of satin, corsage square and décolleté, edged with pearl trimmings and filled in with point Duchess lace; elbow sleeves, with full flow of lace on the top of the sleeves, pearls with pearl fringe. She wore a lace veil, caught back with orange flowers, hand boquet of white lilacs, diamond ornaments. The Rev. Dr. John Hall performed the ceremony. Immediately after the ceremony a reception was given which, as the family is in half mourning, was limited to relatives and intimate friends of both families.

FRUIT FRAUDS.

THE UNDERVALUATION OF CONSIGNMENTS IN ORDER TO DEFRAUD THE CUSTOMS REVENUE.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—For several months it has been the belief of agents of the Treasury Department at this port, Boston, Baltimore, and New Orleans, where shipments of foreign fruits are received, that systematic frauds have been perpetrated upon the Government by the undervaluation of these goods. It has been a difficult matter, however, to detect these frauds, for the receivers of the goods are simply the agents of foreign shippers, and, as it is in their interest to place the value of the fruit at as low a figure as possible, they have combined for that purpose. The Government accepts the valuation fixed by the consignees of goods, except when complaint is made, and then the goods are reappraised by a special Government agent and a commercial agent. The work of investigation began in Boston and has been extended to this and other ports. But it is stated by the Government Special Agent who has been investigating the matter that as soon as they became aware that the cargoes of Messina and Palermo oranges received in Boston had been greatly undervalued, voluntarily advanced the value of goods, and thus avoided the payment of the penalty of 20 per cent which they would have been compelled to pay if the values had been given at a rate below that fixed by the Government. This same Government agent says: "I learned, however, that the heaviest frauds were carried on at New Orleans, where more foreign fruits are received than at any other port in the country. I was told that fruits received at New Orleans were delivered and sold in the Northwest at prices below those ruling in this city and Boston. I telegraphed to and, at my suggestion, he made an investigation which resulted in advancing the value of goods 30 or 40 per cent, and the consignees of goods there were compelled to pay duty at this advanced value, and also to pay the 20 per cent penalty. Since that time all goods entered have been appraised at their full market value in New Orleans, and, in fact, in all other ports. Thus the Government is now receiving full duty upon this class of goods. It is impossible to estimate the loss the Government has sustained by this systematic fraud, but it will amount to many thousand dollars."

CONSIGNEES IN NEW YORK,

THE COLLECTOR AT NEW ORLEANS,

REAL ESTATE.

A STEADY DEMAND FOR RESIDENCES BY DISGUSTED TENANTS.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The volume of real-estate auction sales, though considerably less than last week, keeps up better than was expected for this season of the year, being almost as large now as in the middle of March, which is usually considered the hight of the season. The usual experience is that by the 1st of May there is a marked decrease of transactions. But there seems to be a steadier and at the same time a different kind of demand this spring than has been experienced for several years. There is no speculation now. As far as can be ascertained, there does not seem to have been a single speculative purchase for a month. There are no purchases, or even any negotiations, for the large blocks of unimproved ground usually bought by capitalists who expect to sell out in smaller parcels at higher prices.

SEVERAL ATTEMPTS

made by real-estate agents in the last month to make sales of this character have failed. Everything bought now is apparently for permanent investment and use. There was, probably, never a time when a greater number of houses were being bought by people who expect to occupy them. The high rents this spring have induced many persons who have heretofore been tenants to become their own landlords. Then again, the necessity is felt by many large contractors and builders to sell out the houses they have been building in such great numbers in the northern part of the city.

THEY CONSIDER, WISELY, that now, while the cost of building is high, is the best time to sell. The total of auction sales for the week from Saturday, April 22, to Friday, April 28, inclusive, was $788,373. Of the above total $538,898 were for property south of Fifty-eighth street; $198,674 were for property north of Fifty-eighth street and east of Fifth avenue; and $41,600 for property north of Fifty-eighth street and west of Fifth avenue. The total of foreclosure sales in the above was only $66,800.

LIFE-INSURANCE.

INVESTIGATING THE AFFAIRS OF THE AMERICAN POPULAR LIFE COMPANY.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—During the investigation today by the Assembly Receivership Committee of the affairs of the defunct American Popular Life-Insurance Company, Dr. Thomas Scott Lambert, formerly President of the company, testified that Receiver Lawrence had received moneys for which he did not account to the policy-holders and accused him of the basest perjury and dishonesty. He claimed that while Lawrence acknowledged to Judge Westbrook that it would be very difficult to prove the insolvency of the American Popular, yet he so plundered its resources as to render its revival impossible. The doctor said that Judge Westbrook told him that just before the appointment of a Receiver Judge Donohue came into his (Westbrook's) office and asked who was to be selected. Westbrook replied that he intended to appoint Mr. Smalley. Donohue said, "No, don't do that. Smalley may be a good man enough, but I want Edward Z. Lawrence." Lawrence was appointed and added Dr. Scott. "I've heard of people being likened to a catspaw, but it would be disrespectful for me to speak so of Mr. Justice Westbrook, and I've heard something about a monkey that uses the catspaw for work which might be a little too hot for him. But it would not be proper for me to compare Mr. Justice Donohue to a monkey." Dr. Lambert then gave a lengthy defense of the conduct of the company's affairs while he was its President, insisting that it was perfectly solvent. He claimed that his indictment, trial, and conviction for alleged appropriation of funds was the greatest judicial farce ever committed.

"THE SWINDLE BEGUN,"

A CABLE TELEGRAM.

HOW FAR IT IS BINDING AS A CONTRACT.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Some time ago Samuel Colville, who claims to be the owner of a play, secured an injunction against an actor named Homar McDonough, to restrain him from performing the piece. It was held that McDonough, having secured the refusal of the play from the author, Henry Pettitt, of London, for $5,000, and the latter having accepted the offer by cable, the acceptance became valid from the moment the author's telegram was filed, which made it prior in point of time to Colville's contract. Colville's counsel held that the cable acceptance by defendant did not take effect until the message was in fact received by the author, which would make it subsequent in time to the plaintiff's contract.

TODAY JUDGE LAWRENCE

filed an opinion in which he said: "I am of the opinion that the defendant never accepted the terms of Mr. Pettitt, which were cash. If he had cabled that he had placed $5,000 in the hands of a certain party in London, who was directed to pay over the amount to the author, a very different case would have been presented. The injunction would be continued with costs. It is understood that the defendant intends to appeal, claiming that, as the authority in his refusal did not designate how the cash was to have been paid, it could only be on the delivery of the manuscript.

JOHN L. STODDARD.

HE SAILS FOR EUROPE TO GET NEW PICTURES FOR HIS LECTURES.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—John L. Stoddard, the lecturer on foreign travel, sailed for Europe today for a journey through Norway, Sweden, the Netherlands, Switzerland, and elsewhere, gathering material for his lectures of next season. He was accompanied by Mr. Black, the Boston photographer, and will thus secure a series of original and exclusive illustrations.

GRAIN CORNERS.

THE LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE STILL CONTINUING ITS INVESTIGATION.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The special Senate committee on "corners" and "futures" continued its session today. Isaac H. Reed testified that he could not see why the Legislature should interfere in legitimate business of dealers in options. Any legislation that would limit speculation in corners and futures would result in a decreased volume of business in the Produce Exchange unless the members in some way evaded the law. It would affect the pecuniary interests of the members. Witness could not see how a law could be framed which would correct existing abuses without AFFECTING LEGITIMATE SPECULATION.

Charles Partridge, the next witness, showed that the sales in wheat alone at the exchange from July, 1879, to April 20, 1882, for spot amounted to $244,737,000, while the sales of options, puts and calls, futures, and straddles amounted to $1,154,267,000. He was strongly opposed to the latter way of doing business, as it was demoralizing, and in no business will so many financial wrecks be found as among grain speculators. The system was contrary not only to sound public policy but to the best interests of the people. He thought there should be a law making it a penalty punishable by fine and imprisonment for any person to engage in the sale of products which they never see and handle.

BANK REVIVAL.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE REVIVAL OF THE MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK OF NEWARK, N. J., COMPLETED.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The arrangements for the revival of the burst Mechanics' National Bank of Newark, N. J., have been completed. The signatures have been affixed to the articles of agreement, and a meeting of the trustees appointed by the Directors to superintend the collection and disbursement of the money will be held Monday. The papers incident to the raising of Director Condict's subscription of $250,000 have been drawn, and it is understood that the money is ready for the trustees whenever they may see fit to ask for it. The proposition calls for the payment of 75 per cent to creditors other than the corporation, which will probably receive 50 or 55. These payments will be in full of all demands, and the Directors will be released from further liability. The 75 per cent basis of settlement is 20 per cent better than the Receiver would be able to do with the assets in hand. The Directors will, after all demands shall have been raised, reëstablish the bank with a slightly changed name.

CATTLE-RAISING.

AN EXHAUSTIVE ARTICLE ON THE SUBJECT BY THE HON. J. B. GRINNELL, OF IOWA.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The Hon. J. B. Grinnell, of Iowa, has prepared an exhaustive the Agricultural Review for May on the "Cattle Industries of the United States," giving a complete history, prepared from personal observation, experience, and investigation, of the progress in cattle-breeding, the development of various families, and a description of cattle-raising on the plains, including the great ranches in Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, New Mexico, Colorado, Idaho, Dakota, Wyoming, Arizona, the Indian Territory, and Texas, with the experiences of the largest practical stockmen in the country, including the owners of herds ranging from 500 to 20,000 each. It shows the sections of country best adapted for the business, and abounds with information of the greatest interest and value to every farmer in the United States and Europe. It is the ablest, most practical, and comprehensive article ever written in connection with cattle, and reads like a romance. The article will be a volume of itself, making seventy pages of the magazine. Mr. Grinnell has traveled over 6,000 miles in securing the data for his paper, and was afforded extraordinary facilities for gathering the best information.

NORMAN D. SAMPSON.

TWO INDICTMENTS FOUND AGAINST HIM.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 29.—Two indictments have been found in the Court of General Sessions against Norman D. Sampson, the Chief Examiner of Metals in the Appraiser's Department of the Custom-House. The story concerning Mr. Sampson has already been laid in these dispatches. One indictment charges that, being a married man, he attempted to marry Miss Hattie J. Hull, to whom he was engaged. The other indictment, in which Miss Hattie J. Hull is made a codefendant, charges that on Nov. 1, 1881, Miss Hull attempted to take her own life by throwing herself in front of a moving locomotive on the Metropolitan Elevated Railway, and that Mr. Sampson, who was unlawfully present, aided, counseled, and procured Mrs. Hull to commit the act. Upon a bench warrant Sampson was arrested today and brought before Recorder Smyth. Bail was fixed at $2,000.

The statement of the average condition of the New York banks for the six days ending yesterday is a favorable exhibit, the surplus reserve having been increased $1,846,059, which brings it up to $10,895,000, against $11,440,528 a year ago. The following shows the changes in the various averages: Loans, $1,300,700; specie, $1,564,900; legal-tenders, $965,000; deposits, $2,-899,400; circulation, decrease, $424,300.

NO TRUTH IN THE REPORT.

To the Western Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 29.—At a meeting of the American Electric Light Company today it was stated that there was no truth whatever in the report from Boston as to the retirement from the Board of Trustees of Fred Grant and Mr. Moriarity. Grant was only made President for a day, and ex-Secretary Windom had nothing whatever to do with the business.

AUGUSTIN DALY.

He Is Arrested for Failing to Pay Royalties Due on the Receipts from the Performance of a Musical Comedy.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

BOSTON, Mass., April 29.—The fact was learned today that Augustin Daly, the theatrical manager, was arrested at the St. James Hotel in this city on Wednesday upon affidavit of Louis P. Goulland, music publisher, of Tremont street. Goulland is a partner of Woolsen Morse in a musical comedy. The original right to play the piece was given to Daly, and it was produced in New York and in other cities. It is alleged that Daly has been very backward in the payment of royalties and that there is a large amount due to the author. It is also rumored that Daly or some one representing him returned to Goulland & Morse's box-office statements upon which the royalties were based, which falsely represented the business in certain large cities as being very small, when the fact was that business had been exceedingly large. Daly gave bonds in $2,000. Daly does not deny that he owes the parties, but disputes the amount claimed.

A STRONG PULL.

The Coroner's Jury in the Case of the Scoundrel McManus, Lynched at Minneapolis, Found that He Was Strangled.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

PAUL, Minn., April 29.—The Coroner's jury that held an inquest upon the body of Frank McManus at Minneapolis today, after hearing the evidence of several persons to the facts heretofore detailed, rendered the following verdict: "An inquest taken at Minneapolis, in the County of Hennepin, on the 29th day of April, A. D. 1882, before A. C. Fairbairn, Coroner of the said County of Hennepin. Upon view of the body of Frank McManus lying there dead, by the oaths of the jurors whose names are hereunto subscribed, who, being sworn to inquire, on behalf of the State of Minnesota, when, how, and by what means the said Frank McManus came to his death, upon their oaths do say that he came to his death by strangulation by means unknown to the jury."

The Criminal Court.

In the Criminal Court yesterday morning Judge Gary heard motions for new trials and passed sentences upon the prisoners found guilty at the April term of court.

Josh Granger, a colored youth, was among the first to be called forward. Detective Long testified that he had known the prisoner for several years, and that he was a dangerous man. He had been arrested three times on serious charges in less than a year. "Now, the evidence against you shows," said Judge Gary, "that you went into a restaurant at 12 o'clock one night, and there you found several girls—none of whom probably will ever be canonized—that you asked one of these girls to treat, and that she refused in rather impolite terms. Thereupon you struck her a heavy blow in the face with a bottle. Now, you should never strike a woman. I will give you three months in the Bridewell."

An effort was made to get a new trial for Smith and Bennett, found guilty of complicity in the Niles Centre robbery last December. Judge Gary refused, however, and the two were sentenced—Smith to five and Bennett to two years. Smith told a long story about the robbery, with which he said he and Bennett had nothing to do, though they knew of the planning of the affair, and had viewed the ground previously to breaking into the house.

John Dunkins, John Cragg, and Adam Schaffer were given a year each in the penitentiary for forgery.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A WEEK OF INTERESTING EVENTS.

Special Cable.

LONDON, April 29.—Smalley's special says: Seldom has London known a week so crowded with interesting events: Mr. Gladstone's budget speech on Monday, two important theatrical first nights—"Odette" on Thursday and "Far from the Madding Crowd" tonight—two private views at the Academy yesterday and at the Grosvenor Gallery today, Darwin's funeral on Wednesday, followed the next day in sharp contrast by the royal wedding and numerous dinners and parties to foreign royalties. The political world in the meantime has been in a ferment with new developments and new departures in the Irish matter. Mr. Gladstone's speech Wednesday, coupled with the extraordinary interchange of civilities between him and the Land-Leaguers, gave the first warning of

A COMING CHANGE.

Mr. Gladstone, instead of meeting as heretofore a proposal of a modification of the Land act with a non possumus, greeted Mr. Redmond's speech on his bill almost cordially, shrewdly emphasizing the change of tone of the Parnellite party and ignoring the fact that to this change were due the preliminary communications from Ministerial agents. The exact method of dealing with the arrears-of-rent question will be indicated on Tuesday, but it is believed that it will be proposed to cancel tenants' obligations incurred prior to 1880, compensating landlords to a certain extent. Purchase clauses are not included in the present scheme, the Government preferring to wait and see what comes of Mr. Smith's motion, effect of Earl Spencer's appointment. Mr. Redmond's bill, it is notorious,

WAS FRAMED BY MR. PARNELL.

Hence arises the extraordinary situation of the Government negotiating a new Irish settlement with the Kilmainham prisoner. Rumors of the release of Parnell, Dillon, and O'Kelly immediately sprang up and gained fresh currency when it became known yesterday that the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland had resigned, Earl Spencer, who succeeded him, remaining a Cabinet Minister, which Earl Cowper was not. Earl Spencer's appointment is understood to signify the reorganization of the administration in Ireland, especially the overhauling of Dublin Castle. Today's rumors go much further, implying nothing less than Mr. Forster's practical withdrawal from immediate superintendence of Irish affairs, taking charge of Ireland in Parliament, but returning no more to Dublin. A partial reconstruction of the Cabinet is believed also to be imminent, one new Minister coming in—either the Earl of Derby or Lord Rosebery—with an expensive redistribution of departments. London is today but the gravest fact of the whole situation—namely, the large departure from the present policy of governing Ireland—seems undoubted. This departure is all in the direction of more concession and conciliation, which the Irish are sure to interpret as a sign of weakness. The Land-Leaguers, however, admit that negotiations now turn on the withdrawal of the "no-rent" circular, which even the Irish would understand to signify an acknowledgment of defeat.

FILLED WITH RUMORS OF EVERY SORT,

DR. LAMSON'S EXECUTION

finds no critics. English opinion, alike professional and unprofessional, has pronounced the testimony sent from America scandalously insufficient as the basis of a request for a reprieve. Lawyers frequently express amazement that the American Attorney-General should have regarded it as possessing any legal validity whatever.

EMERSON.

All the leading London papers publish full biographies of Mr. Emerson. The leading articles without exception express sympathetic and affectionate admiration of his sweetness and dignity of character. Adequate recognitions of his intellectual position and influence as a teacher are given. The details of his last illness and the accounts of American tributes to his character which appear in the Standard and the News were eagerly read. Emerson followers and friends, once a small band in England, included of late years all that was most eminent intellectually. England deplores his death not less than America, and, while recognizing the originality of his genius, she still claims him as an organ of the English race.

MR. DARWIN'S FUNERAL

at Westminster Abbey on Wednesday brought together representatives of every class most eminent in England except royalty. No member of the royal family was present personally or by deputy, their absence provoking much sharp comment. "He was ignored in death as in life," says Prof. Huxley, "by the ruling dynasty. Conservatism in the Church and the State universities wisely sent its most distinguished delegates. Lord Salisbury and three other members of the Beaconsfield Cabinet were present. Roman Catholics alone among the ecclesiastics renew their expression of old animosity."

THE CHANNEL TUNNEL.

The Nineteenth Century for May publishes nearly 500 fresh signatures to the protest against the channel tunnel, including the names of many among the most distinguished peers, military and naval officers, and celebrities of every class. There are also articles strongly condemning the tunnel by Gens. Simmons and Hamley. Everything points to an overwhelming force of public opinion hostile to this enterprise. The same periodical has on America, denying that he ever imputed vulgarity to Americans, and declaring that he regards them as English people on the other side of the Atlantic. But he proceeds to collect unfavorable examples of American habits, and affirms that America has still her civilization to make and that Philistines constitute the bulk of her national life. He concludes with the highly remarkable opinion that what America most wants is good secondary schools. The whole article is based almost avowedly on sources of information not consciously unfriendly, but glaringly inadequate.

AN ARTICLE BY MATTHEW ARNOLD

EFFECT OF THE TORIES' SOMERSET—THE "SUSPECTS"—JENNINGS' CRITICISM OF GLADSTONE.

Special Cable.

LONDON, April 29.—Jennings' special says: The rank absurdity of keeping Mr. Parnell and Mr. Dillon in prison, now that the opposition to the Land act for which they were incarcerated is admitted by the leaders of the Liberals to be just, is perfectly obvious—at least to sections of both parties. The Government probably had hopes that Mr. Parnell would not surrender himself on the expiration of his parole. Indeed, it was within his legal right to compel them to rearrest him, and now it has no other alternative but to release him with flying colors. The Conservative party's policy on the Irish land question leaves the Liberals quite adrift from their moorings, and has made a great impression upon the country.

THE PREMIER THIS WEEK

has confined all his efforts to gaining a little more time for considering what is to be his next move. It is almost inevitable that there must soon be a general jail-delivery of the "suspects," or at least of those not resting under the imputation of being concerned in murder and similar grave offenses, with the implied confession that they should never have been imprisoned. The report of the Lords' committee gives the most conclusive evidence that Mr. Gladstone's much-vaunted panacea for the wrongs of Ireland is the most wretched failure in modern times.

THE JEWS.

I have just received news from Mr. Lawrence Oliphant concerning the progress of his mission for the relief of the persecuted Hebrews of Russia. He had, when he wrote, just dispatched from Limberg 230 fugitives, who sailed from Hamburg on Wednesday for your city. These poor creatures have been living in the greatest distress for the last six months at Brody on the pittance of 75 cents a week each. News has reached Mr. Oliphant from Russia of continued persecutions—persecutions, too, much more atrocious than readers would imagine who see nothing more trustworthy than the carefully-expurgated reports allowed to appear in the Russian press. Thus he informs me that a massacre recently took place at Balta, a town distant from Odessa seven hours' ride, in which at least thirty Hebrews were killed, many more were wounded, and an immense amount of property was destroyed. The Jews on this occasion, I am glad to say, did not endure outrage unresistingly, but defended themselves with such resolution that twenty "Christians" were killed. These facts, I may add, have not yet been made known in England, but when the news comes back to us from your side of the water it may be expected to revive and intensify the agitation in behalf of the Czar's unfortunate Israelitish subjects.

MATTHEW ARNOLD.

The new number of the Nineteenth Century contains a paper by Matthew Arnold, entitled "A Word to America," which is reasonably sure of being widely read and discussed in the United States. Mr. Arnold denies the statement, made in the Atlantic Monthly, to the effect that he had spoken of American manners as "vulgar." He says that he never held any such language, but that the life of Americans does seem to him to be the life of the British Philistine. He sees the "bitter and rowdy Philistines" exhibiting themselves with great luxuriance and with very little check in the United States. Quoting Mr. Lowell's saying that "Americans are the most common-schooled and the least cultivated people in the world," Mr. Arnold says that what is manifestly needed is a higher and larger cultivation. "America needs good secondary schools with a practical program," and he asks his American critics what they think of this. Blackwood's Magazine also contains an article founded on an American novel "Democracy," from which work "Old Ebony" gives copious extracts, adding, as the conclusion of the whole matter, that the book makes extraordinary disclosures, and justifies the inference that things are in a very bad way indeed on your side of the Atlantic.

PICTURES.

The private view of the Royal Academy's exhibition was the event of London's life yesterday. There are some very fine pictures on the walls this year, mixed, however, with a great deal of rubbish. Mr. Millais contributes seven pictures, all portraits, the best being that of Sir Henry Thompson. Sir Frederick Leighton is represented by a large picture of a copper-colored Phryne, an eccentric work, and Mr. George Boughton sends several powerful Dutch sketches. But by far the best landscape, I believe, is a view in Rosshire, with cattle, by Davis. The picture is even praised greatly by all the other artists. All fashionable London assembled on this occasion, as a matter of course, but the only American I recognized was Bret Harte.

LAMSON.

The London papers still continue to comment pitilessly on poor Lamson's case. No mercy is shown him even after death. His poor father wisely fled from England on Thursday. His mother is reported to be dying. His wife lay for a long time in prison on Thursday after bidding her husband good-by.

GLADSTONE'S PROGRAM.

Special Cable.

LONDON, April 29.—The Herald special says: The political interest of the week languidly centered in Mr. Gladstone's budget and the Government's change of front regarding Ireland. There is much disappointment about the Premier's final developments. No true Englishman, of course, ever dreams of paying off the national debt, for is it not a national blessing? But all were inclined to cherish the hope, as usual blighted, of a reduction of the income tax. Instead of this the Premier caused consternation to the country Squires and to society generally by taxing wheels. It is a matter of regret that perambulators were exempt. The Tories are very irate over the Premier's "Voltaface" policy in Ireland. They consider that the Government is truckling to the Irish party in promising legislation on arrears of rent. It is admitted that an important change of policy in Ireland is indicated by

THE APPOINTMENT OF EARL SPENCER.

The new Viceroy comes of a race of statesmen. His previous experience of the Viceroyalty, his personal popularity in Ireland, and his known aversion to coercion, are advantages in every one of which Lord Cowper was wanting, and which will doubtless cause Lord Spencer's influence to be felt for good in the administration of Irish affairs. It is will retain the Chief Secretaryship, but, even if he does, he will no longer be the head of the Government of Ireland, as under Lord Cowper, nor will the change of policy be less marked. Mr. Shaw is mentioned as a possible successor of Mr. Forster. Tuesday's debate, when the Government will declare its policy, is anticipated with much interest.

DOUBTFUL WHETHER MR. FORSTER

THREATENING THE LIFE OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

To the Western Associated Press.

DONCASTER, April 29.—A railway employé named Albert Young has been arrested for threatening the life of the Queen. He will be taken to London. It is believed to be a threat of bravado. Young wrote Gen. Sir Henry Ponsonby, private secretary to the Queen, demanding money and threatening the lives of her Majesty and Prince Leopold. He is apparently crazy.

SCULLING-MATCH WON BY AN AMERICAN.

The rowing race on the Thames between Gookin, of Boston, and Bubear, was won easily by the former.

EMERSON.

The Times says: "With Ralph Waldo Emerson's death, a great break has occurred. The present generation has lost the strongest and almost the sole tie which binds it to the Boston or Concord of Hawthorne, Margaret Fuller, Alcott, Channing, and Theodore Parker."

The Standard says: "More genial, more delicate than Carlyle, Emerson, nevertheless, had much in common with him. His loss will be keenly felt on both sides of the Atlantic."

The Daily Telegraph says: "Emerson, alike in his eloquent prose and thoughtful poetry, has been the most genuine American among all that brilliant New England company to which he belonged."

"UNITED IRELAND."

DUBLIN, April 29.—In the action of United Ireland against Forster, to recover £20,000 damages on account of the seizure of that paper, the defendant refuses to answer interrogatories on the ground that they concern matters of State.

SIX "SUSPECTS."

NAAS, April 29.—Six "suspects" were liberated today.

GERMANY.

DEATH OF THE LEADING SPIRITUALIST AND AN EMINENT ASTRONOMER.

Special Cable.

BERLIN, April 29.—John Charles Frederick Zoellner, the noted astronomical spiritualist, is dead. He was born at Berlin Nov. 8, 1834. He pursued his studies at the universities of his native city and Basle, Switzerland. At the latter city he obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, and gave himself up to the study of photometry, applied to astronomy and physiology. He went to Leipsic in 1862 to continue his studies at the new observatory in that city. There he accepted an assistant Professorship in 1865, and, after refusing several other chairs, accepted that of physical astronomy in the same university. He was made a full Professor in 1872.

AMONG THE PRINCIPAL WORKS of Prof. Zoellner are "Researches in Photometry," "Theory of the Relative Force of Light in the Phases of the Moon," "On the Nature of Comets," and "Principles of the Electro-Dynamic Theory of Matter." He was the inventor of a special spectroscope for the observation of the solar protuberances and the lines of the spectrum. This instrument has been widely adopted by astronomers. Prof. Zoellner had been brought into special prominence within the last few years in connection with the movement in favor of spiritualism among the savans of Germany. For several generations there has been a small circle of believers in magnetism and spiritualism in Leipsic, but it was very limited. Since 1870, when Helmholtz attempted to popularize the idea of the fourth dimension of space, much attention has been paid to the subject in Germany, and many essays and works have been written upon the ABSOLUTE GEOMETRY.

It was asserted that, by means of this seeming paradox, the Newtonian conception of the universe was revolutionized. On the other hand, Lotze declared the whole discussion to be a logical jugglery and a grimace of science to intimidate the ordinary mind by useless paradoxes. New significance was given to the much-abused theory when Prof. Zoellner and his associates applied it to Spiritualism. Two or three years ago the American medium, Slade, after being imprisoned for his fraudulent manifestations in London, went to Leipsic. There, by his tricks, he succeeded in to a belief in Spiritualism. The learned Professor immediately tried to reconcile his belief with his mathematics, and found the solution in the mystical fourth dimension of space. In it, he argued, all impossible conceivable things may be done. His belief spread among the students of the university, and was also adopted by many of the half-cultured and well-to-do business classes. The adoption of this belief by so distinguished a scientist led to a bitter controversy.

CONVERTING ZOELLNER AND TWO ASSOCIATES

HELMHOLTZ

received much blame for occasioning the movement by an indiscreet attempt to make the mystical theory of the fourth dimension of space intelligible to scientific laymen. He published an open letter to Zoellner, in which he made an indignant protest against the application of his theories to Spiritualism. Zoellner was even charged with being insane. His classes diminished rapidly, and he met with great opposition from the professors of the university. The learned Professor was not dismayed by opposition, but vigorously defended himself by issued within twenty months. In these works he made bitter personal attacks on some of the most eminent German Professors, including some of the Leipsic faculty. He sought not so much to prove his doctrine as to conquer for Spiritualism a free field among great scientific themes. He published the "Wissenschaftliche Abhandlungen," which was partly scientific and partly in defence of his Spiritualistic theories. The book on which his reputation mainly rests is "On the Nature of Comets."

FOUR IMMENSE VOLUMES

THE SEA OF SAHARA.

Special Cable.

PARIS, April 29.—The Herald's special says: Capt. Rondaire's startling scheme for making a great inland sea to the south of Algeria and Tunis is attracting a great deal of attention. The subject has been carefully discussed by the Council of Ministers and a special commission is to consider the question of ways and means. The cost of carrying out the scheme would not seem to be enormous. M. Rondaire is of opinion that $15,000,000 would amply suffice to cover all expenses. In eight years at most he thinks the gigantic work might be finished. It is not impossible that the same year may be made memorable in the history of engineering by the opening of the Panama Canal and of the great inland sea of Africa.

A LADY WAS DELIVERED OF THREE CHILDREN

here this week under rather singular circumstances. She was looking at the bears in the Jardin des Plantes when the first child was unexpectedly brought into the world. Some compassionate bystanders hailed a carriage and put mother and infant into it. Before she reached home, however, the lady was delivered of the second child. Hardly had she got to her journey's end when she presented her unhappy husband with a third. It is satisfactory to know that the mother of the triplets is well. The father has threatened to commit suicide.

GEORGE SAND'S CORRESPONDENCE.

Special Cable.

PARIS, April 29.—The Herald special says: A new volume of George Sand's correspondence made its appearance this week on the Paris book-stalls. Many of the letters it contains are of deep interest, notably that in which the great writer tells the story of her rupture with her husband, Baron Dudevant. This volume, however, only contains a few of the numerous letters written by the author of "Consuelo." Figaro yesterday published one which had not before been printed. It throws a prophetic and at the same time a retrospective light upon the very peculiar career of M. Alexandre Dumas fils. Only the other day Dumas claimed credit for having written the greatest part of the well-known comedy, "Le Marquis de Villemer." This play, as is well known, was adapted from a far more famous novel of the same name by George Sand. Listen to what Mme. Sand has to say of her collaboration with Dumas: "As you know, Alexandre has been to Nahant. Hearing that I thought of making a comedy of my 'Marquis De Villemer' he offered to help me. Feeling that he would be useful, I consented. The more I see of him, however, the more I fear he is one of those people whom our Berrichon peasants in their simple way would call folk who pull all the blankets to their side of the bed.' When it becomes known that Alexandre is to be my collaborator the public will attribute the whole merit of the 'Marquis De Villemer' to him. Nor from what I have seen of him should I wonder if he himself did the same as the public. If ever you hear that Alexandre wrote the piece alone do not contradict the story. It would pain him greatly and give me little pleasure."

BY MAIL.

GERMAN ALLIANCES—HOW BISMARCK DROVE ITALY INTO AN ALLIANCE AGAINST RUSSIA AND FRANCE.

Special to London Standard.

ROME, April 14.—King Humbert is not expected to visit Monza until next month. The meeting between the Italian sovereign and the Emperor of Austria is almost certain to come off at that spot; but, notwithstanding the numerous announcements to the contrary, it cannot take place before some date in May, or even later.

I had an interview today with an Italian politician of eminence, who has every opportunity of being well informed as to what is going on in the diplomatic world. I mentioned the rumor that Germany was concluding an alliance with Sweden against Russia. In reference to this subject, my informant said: "I do not believe that there is any formal alliance, or even any strict stipulations such as were arranged with Austria in view of certain eventualities. I am strongly of opinion, however, that there is a certain understanding, not only with Sweden, but also with Holland and Belgium." "With Belgium?" I asked, with surprise. "Yes," was the reply. "I have reason to believe that there is an understanding with Belgium. The entire situation will force the smaller States to take a decided part for or against Russia. Prince Bismarck's policy consists in expanding an eventual war with Russia into one involving Europe generally. Italy could not avoid taking part in it, nor would public opinion in this Kingdom be opposed to such a course. Italians would be prepared, without distinction of party, to go from the beginning with Germany and Austria. Prince Bismarck's entire recent policy has aimed at bringing about this result, in spite of the irresolution of Italian statesmen.

AT THE BERLIN CONGRESS

the Italians did not understand the great plan agreed upon between Lord Beaconsfield and Prince Bismarck, or they thought the plan false and dangerous to European peace. They thought that the San Stefano Treaty, which created a large and strong Bulgaria and a strong Servia and Montenegro, was good security in itself for the independence of the Balkan States from Russia. Part of the plan projected by the English and German statesmen was that Italy should join a permanent alliance between England, Germany, and Austria against Russia and France. But the Italians would not understand and began the Irredenta agitation. A few months after the conclusion of the Berlin Treaty Italy was directly menaced at once by Lord Beaconsfield and Prince Bismarck in case the agitation was not stopped. Thereupon there was a temporary lull, but before long the agitation commenced anew. Happily for Italy, which was spared certain humiliation, Lord Beaconsfield had to resign office soon afterwards, owing to the unfavorable result of the elections. Henceforward the task of carrying out their great design rested with Prince Bismarck alone, who at once decidedly encouraged Baron Haymerle in assuming a menacing attitude towards Italy. Moreover, the German Chancellor himself lost no opportunity of endeavoring to bring Italy round to his policy. In this he was greatly assisted by the Tunis affair, which also helped him to bring Turkey under his influence."

I ASKED WHY PRINCE BISMARCK

attached so much importance to Italy's adhesion to the Central European Alliance, to which my Italian friend answered, "Because he is thereby surer of Austria, and because Prince Bismarck and Count Moltke do not consider that fighting Russia and France would be a slight affair. As to France," continued my informant, "it is considered that the upsetting of the Thiers' army organization will weaken her, while other sources of weakness are to be found in the Tunis and Algerian difficulties, which are far greater than the French papers admit. The case is different with Russia. Count Moltke, when in this city some years ago, said: 'The Russian soldier is excellent, although his guidance is defective. Russia is strong in the attack, but she is irresistible when on the defense. Where can a Russian army be found when it retires into the interior? Nobody would dare to pursue it beyond certain limits. Hence Russia is much stronger than France or Austria.' I then inquired of my informant whether he considered the danger of war was over. "No!" he replied. "Any day may make the peril imminent, but at the present moment all is quiet."

FIRE RECORD.

Blazes in Chicago.

The alarm from Box 36 at 8:19 last evening was caused by the explosion of escaping gas under the sidewalk in front of the four-story and basement stone-front building, No. 118 Madison street, owned by E. W. Morrison, and occupied as a grocery by James Hickson. The fire ran up a wooden stairway leading into the grocery, and was under considerable headway when the fire department arrived. Damage to the building $300, and to the grocery stock estimated at $1,200, all of which is fully covered by insurance.

The alarm from Box 325 at 7:30 last evening was caused by a fire on the lower floor of a three-story brick building at No. 551 Halsted street, owned by John Hinkle, and occupied as a dry-goods store by Emanuel Klein. Joseph Lodick, a small boy employed in the store, while lighting the lamps accidentally set fire to the window-curtains. Damage to building $75, and to stock about $300; fully covered by insurance.

The alarm from Box 47 at 9:50 last evening was caused by a fire in Room 1, No. 190 Clark street, the publication office of the Israelitische Presse, a newspaper printed in Hebrew. The cause is supposed to have been the spontaneous combustion of oiled rags. Damage to building $50, and to type and machinery $250. Slight damage was done the clothing stock of Harry Hart & Bros. on the first floor.

The alarm from Box 816 at 8:20 last evening was caused by a fire on the roof of a two-story frame dwelling at No. 25 Blair street, owned and occupied by Patrick Kerwin. Cause, sparks from the chimney. Damage, $50.

The alarm from Box 24 at 5:15 yesterday afternoon was caused by a small blaze on the fifth floor of Reid, Murdoch & Fisher's wholesale grocery, No. 38 Michigan avenue, and was caused by an overheated fruit-drier. The blaze was easily put out with a portable extinguisher. Damage, $20.

A Destructive Fire at Winnipeg, Manitoba, Friday.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

ST. PAUL, Minn., April 29.—A dispatch from Winnipeg says a fire occurred yesterday in the Imperial Bank block, and for a time threatened the square in which it originated. The bank will not lose much, as its valuables and money are in a mammoth safe sure to withstand fire, and the furniture is insured for $2,000 in the Imperial Insurance Company. Gilmour, late of the grocery firm of Ray & Gilmour, is the heaviest loser. His stock, valued at $15,000, is insured for only $5,000. The liquors in the cellar will be saved. Aikens, Culver & Hamilton, a legal firm up-stairs, lose heavily on a law library valued at $5,000, and on furniture, etc., $3,000. The library was insured in the Lancashire for $2,000. All the valuable papers of the firm were in safes. The building was a handsome solid brick block, owned by John R. Robertson, and valued at $40,000. It is a total wreck. There was insurance on the building as follows: City of London, $4,000; Lancashire, $5,000; Phœnix, $5,000; total, $14,000. A number of other parties were burned out. Many were not insured and others only partially. The total loss is estimated at $80,000. The origin of the fire is supposed to have been through the explosion of a coal-oil lamp which fell from the hands of an intoxicated man occupying a sleeping apartment on the second floor. He was seriously burned and cut in leaping through a window to a veranda in the rear. Others sleeping on the third floor were roused in their night clothes and lost everything. One man is reported missing, and is said to have been burned in the building.

MRS. JESSE JAMES.

A Pen-Picture of the Bandit's Widow—Her Visit to St. Louis and Her Mysterious Female Friend.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 28.—The register at the Southern Hotel this morning bore the names of R. J. Haire, Kansas City; Miss Blake, Detroit; Mrs. W. Jay, Chicago: ordinary names enough, little likely to attract attention, but to your correspondent they were significant, when he remembered that R. J. Haire is the attorney of Mrs. Jesse James, widow of the late Jesse James. Mr. Haire was found and, after some little persuasion he was induced to escort the writer to the rooms of the ladies. Mrs. James does not correspond with any hitherto published description of her. As she greeted the correspondent today he saw before him a woman of about medium hight, with slightly stooping shoulders, apparently about 35 years of age, though much suffering and the ordeal she has recently passed through give her features a careworn expression that makes her look five years older. She wore a neatly-fitting, plainly-made, black cashmere dress. She is a blonde, with very light hair and blue eyes. Her face appears to be tanned, and her features show her to be a woman of a high order of intellect. The lines about her eyes, and more particularly the mouth, show her to be possessed of considerable force of character, and a judge of character would immediately pronounce her capable of keeping a secret. Her movements would show her to be a woman who has not been used to polite society, and her language confirms this impression. She talks slowly, and without the least regard for the rules of grammar.

Mrs. James would not talk of her husband's affairs. She is under contract with a St. Louis publisher, by which she and the bandit's mother, Mrs. Samuels, bind themselves not to talk to any newspaper man on the subject of Jesse's life and career. Several newspapers have printed alleged interviews with Mrs. James, but she took occasion to say to your correspondent: "I hain't had no interview with no newspaper man." She was emphatic in her assertions that interviews heretofore published were false and purely imaginative. When asked as to the whereabouts of Frank James she said she did not want to talk about him, refusing positively to say whether or not she knew of his whereabouts. The bandit's widow is in town, she says, to attend to her private business, which means the publication of a biography of her late husband, soon to be printed.

The identity of "Miss Blake" is a conundrum. During the conversation with the widow "Miss Blake" occupied a rather elevated position on a small table, with two dainty feet perched on the window-sill, and a morning newspaper across her lap. She was attired in a suit of green ladies-cloth, the skirt of which was fashioned after the Mother Hubbard pattern, but the waist was closely-fitting and tastefully decorated with large buttons. "Miss Blake" could make pretensions to beauty. She possesses lovely black eyes, black hair, and a complexion that many society belles would envy. There are different stories as to who she is, but the probabilities are she is Mrs. Allen Palmer, Jesse James' sister, and wife of a former pal of the great bandit. It is known that this lady recently made the trip from her home in Texas to see her mother-in-law, and nothing is more likely than that she should accompany her brother's widow on her trip to St. Louis.

LIZZIE VAN LEW.

Romance and Scandal in the Capital of the Old Dominion.

New York Star.

RICHMOND, Va., April 21.—One of the most interesting cases of romance and scandal that has agitated Richmond for a long time has taken place here recently. In that part of Richmond known as Church Hill stands a huge pile of buildings, occupying an entire square on Grace street. It is a high eminence, and the rear portion of the large grounds is terraced and thickly studded with rare shade and fruit trees, and ornamented with rustic seats. The property is known as the Van Lew estate, and is owned by Miss Elizabeth Van Lew, an unmarried lady, who has a National reputation.

During the late War she was a determined Unionist. When a Union officer with the rank of a Colonel tunnelled the Libby prison and escaped, together with others, Miss Van Lew concealed them in her grand old castle, which, from its isolated position and topographical location, was admirably adapted for the purposes of the fugitives. It is also said that Miss Van Lew was in daily communication with the Union forces, and there are those living who say that she has frequently shown them cipher letters which she received and the alphabet which she used in transmitting information concerning the movements of Confederate troops, and other important facts when Gen. Grant was besieging Richmond and Petersburg. Miss Van Lew used her cipher to a good purpose, and when the General became the President of the United States he rewarded the services of the old lady by giving her the charge of the Richmond post-office, but when Hayes was elected she was displaced.

About a year ago a topographical engineer named Rasloff came to Richmond and secured employment in the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad Company's service. He had the best kind of letters of introduction from foreign Ministers and other men of prominence. He secured rooms at Miss Van Lew's romantic residence. Miss Van Lew has a niece who has long resided with her, and to whom she had willed all her property. The niece is named Eliza Van Lew, and is the daughter of John N. Van Lew. Miss Lizzie's boarder, Rasloff, had a library, which he offered to share with the pretty niece, and the books he left out for her to read treated of free love in the strongest terms. The aunt became enraged when this was discovered, and ordered Rasloff from the house.

The father of the niece then obtained a warrant, in which he charged his daughter with lunacy. A commission consisting of W. H. Granger, J. D. Whitehead, and R. M. Taylor heard the case and dismissed the warrant. Rasloff then swore out a similar warrant against the aunt, and another commission, consisting of Justices W. J. Holmes, R. M. Taylor, and W. H. Shields, after examining the witnesses, dismissed this also. The niece has left the city, and the aunt has destroyed the will in which she bequeathed the niece all her property. Public indignation runs high against Rasloff, whose doctrines are held in strong contempt here.

NEW WHEAT AT $4.50 PER BUSHEL.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., April 29.—The first new wheat of this year's crop was received here this morning by S. W. Cobb & Co., and sold at the noon call at $4.50 per bushel, the highest price ever paid here. It consists of 100 sacks, is a little damp, but is plump and bright, and grades No. 2. It was raised in Johnson county, Arkansas, and is the earliest shipment by just one month ever made to this point.

A LOTTERY DRAWING AT LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., April 29.—The forty-third drawing of the Commonwealth Distribution Company took place today. The following prizes were drawn: First, $30,000 by ticket 90,432; second, $10,000 by ticket 25,456; third, $5,000 by ticket 17,076. The following tickets drew $1,000 each: 18,488, 43,704, 51,705, 58,893, 61,481.

Current Oddities.

One of the daughters of Meer Goolam Baba, Nawab of Surat, is about to be married at Surat. A correspondent of the Bombay Samachar writes from Surat that the procession which carried the bride's dowry to the bridegroom's house is worthy of special mention. A number of elephants, horses, carriages, and palkees led the procession. After them came a number of female servants, all in snow-white clothes, each bearing in her hand a covered tray. About fifty youths followed with rosewater decanters of silver on silver salvers. Then came 500 coolies, some with magnificent bedsteads, with curtains, pillows, etc.; others with swings, benches, boxes, cupboards of various designs, sofas, chairs, tables, and, in short, all the paraphernalia of a modern house. These were followed by seventy-five women, each carrying a tray of sweetmeats. One hundred men with cooking utensils brought up the rear. Some of these men carried on their heads basket-loads of lamps, wall-shades, chandeliers, etc. In fact it was a regular exhibition of domestic goods. A large number of spectators lined the streets to witness the procession.

An exciting scene occurred on April 8, in Paris at the Café de la Presse, in the Rue Montmartre, the heroes being Messrs. Lullier and Lissagaray, both ex-members of the Commune. Lissagaray was quietly sitting in the café in company with Mr. Henry Maret, a Radical Deputy and journalist, when Lullier entering the room walked up to him with a cigar in his mouth, and made a motion as though he would strike him. Lissagaray had his revolver out in a trice and was pointing it at Lullier, when the latter, also producing a revolver, challenged him to fire. For a few seconds the two stood face to face, their weapons directed at each other, and remained in this dangerous attitude until some of the bystanders intervened. Messrs. Maret and Lissagaray eventually left the café, when Mr. Lullier coolly resumed his seat at the adjoining table. Why the deuce, exclaims the Figaro, does not one of these men kill the other and rid the rest of society from such stupid exhibitions for the future?

Mr. Bullier, the former proprietor of the Closerie des Lilas, or students' ball, in Paris, which Paul de Kock and several other authors have celebrated, and where most of the prominent men of the Third Republic, including Gambetta and Leproc, have graduated in the art Vestris professed, has sold his lease and good will. As a gallant man "Papa Bullier" could not take leave of his patrons without bidding them farewell. He issued an invitation to them all announcing that no one would be allowed to pay at the doors, and that admission would only be given to those who could produce their cards certifying that they were following some learned profession. Over 2,000 students were present.

Henri Giffard, the French engineer and aeronaut, whose death has been announced from Paris, was distinguished for his partly-successful attempt to steer a balloon. In 1852, on Sept. 24, he ascended from the Paris Hippodrome with his queer air-ship, which was propelled in a lateral or transverse direction by means of a steam engine of three-horse power. Unfortunately a strong wind was blowing, and he could not make headway against it, but was able to tack and guide his balloon in a circle with great facility. He was also the projector of the great captive balloon of the Champs de Mars in 1867, and the still larger airship of the Exhibition of 1878. This balloon was 180 feet high and 118 feet in diameter.

Had not Lamson been in such a hurry to secure a few pounds to put an end to the absolute want from which he suffered, he might have escaped discovery. "Everything requires time; don't hurry to speak," said the Italian Count Buondelamento, as he stood weeping and sobbing by the bedside of his dying wife, who had been fading away for more than a year. "But I must hasten to tell my sin," gasped the wife. "I cannot die without confessing that I have been unfaithful to my marriage vow, and that I have loved Count Malvazzi." "I know it well enough," returned the Count blandly, "and that is why I began to poison you from the moment he first entered the house."

Several of the liveliest and prettiest actresses of the Vaudeville, Gymnase, and other Paris theatres formed themselves about three years ago into a society which took the name of "Les Kicuses." They meet once a month at dinner, and according to the statutes, no male creature is allowed to be at these gatherings, and no man's name is even permitted to be mentioned, unless it is to level some abuse at his devoted head. Nor are the ladies allowed to talk of theatrical matters in a business-like way. Fines are exacted if these rules are transgressed.

LABOR AND CAPITAL.

South Chicago.

A rumor was in circulation yesterday at South Chicago which caused some uneasiness in the minds of many of its citizens. It was to the effect that an attempt was shortly to be made to blow up the North Chicago Rolling-Mills at South Chicago with dynamite. It was asserted that a conspiracy had been formed for that purpose among the disaffected "ore-dock gang." Considerable trouble has been experienced with about forty men employed in unloading ore at the dock. They have been receiving 20 cents per hour, and struck for an increase in wages. The men engaged in that work have struck several times, and each time their places have been filled by outside men, and a good deal of bitter feeling was engendered. Upon hearing the rumor a reporter called at the office of the company, but the officials had not heard the report, and did not seem to think that any credence was to be placed in the threats of a few dissatisfied men.

The End of the Iron Boom Making Trouble at Cleveland, O.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CLEVELAND, O., April 29.—The Cleveland Rolling-Mill Company tonight shut down their rail mill in Newburg. This throws about 110 men out of employment. The Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers' Union had decided to ask for 15 per cent advance June 1, and it is thought this action was taken to make them withdraw their demand. The company is up with their orders, and have nothing to lose by the shut-down. More trouble is expected when the scale of prices of the Union is presented.

The Brickmakers.

The strike among the brickmakers still continues. The men at Purington's and Tegtmeyer's yards are still out, their demands for an increase from $2 to $2.50 per day not having been complied with by the "bosses." There have been no riotous demonstrations as yet, and the men have been quite orderly. The strike promises to continue for some time, as the men threaten to remain firm in their demands for an increase.

The Bread-Bakers.

Yesterday afternoon a committee of two appointed by the striking journeymen bakers visited D. F. Bremner's and other large bakeries, and stated that the men had decided to work for $15 per week, and would not raise the question of the number of hours. This was looked upon as a concession on the part of the strikers, and the strike is virtually at an end, as the bakers have decided to take the men back.

Lemont Quarrymen.

The strike of the Lemont quarrymen is nearly at an end. The arrest of the riotous ringleaders has had a salutary effect, and there are no more demonstrations. Yesterday there were about 400 men at work in the quarries, and the prospects are that more will be put on tomorrow morning. No further trouble is anticipated.

A Strike Averted at Mineral Ridge.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., April 29.—A Mineral Ridge (O.) special to the News-Register says: "President McBride, of the Ohio State Organization of Miners, telegraphs John E. Fowler, Vice-President, of this place, to continue work, thereby averting the expected strike Monday."

Hyde Park.

The Hyde Park branch of the Illinois Humane Association met last night in the lecture-room of the First Presbyterian Church, President Cornell in the chair. The committee appointed to draw up the by-laws for the society reported that they deemed it advisable that the society should await the action of the convention of the State Association which meets at the Grand Pacific Hotel next Saturday, when the by-laws of the association will be revised. President Cornell, the Rev. C. H. Bixby, D. H. Horne, Mrs. Blaine, and F. M. Webster were appointed delegates to the convention. It was decided that life memberships should not be less than $25, annual memberships, including a subscription to the Humane Journal, $2; and an annual membership for children was fixed at 50 cents. Steps were taken towards the appointment of a suitable man as policeman for the Village Board, who shall also be vested with the power of an agent of the Humane Society. Arrangements were set on foot towards getting subscriptions for a drinking-fountain for horses at the city limits, near the head of Grand boulevard.

Young Bismarck and the Fans.

An interesting lawsuit is soon to be decided in Hungary. Prince Bismarck's son William spent the summer at the watering place of Mehadia, where he paid some attention to two fair sisters, who desired more tangible proofs of his affection than were contained in compliments. Accordingly they selected a number of articles of jewelry, and asked the jeweler to take them to "Count Bill" and say that the young ladies had admired them greatly. The jeweler declined the operation, but another dealer proved more enterprising or less scrupulous, and took two fans to the Count, saying that the price was 80 florins and that the ladies had wished to have the articles in question. The Count replied with diplomatic sarcasm that in the delightfully cool temperature which always characterized that charming health resort fans were more than superfluous, and subsequently when he met the ladies asked with his father's cheery frankness if they knew anything about the dealer's mission. The ladies promptly, though not without some confusion, denied having ever said anything to the dealer, and "Count Bill" at once handed the merchant over to the tribunal of commerce on a charge of endeavoring, through false pretenses, to extort 80 florins from him for a pair of fans barely worth 40. The dealer in self-defense has summoned the ladies as witnesses, and the trial promises to be an interesting one.

THE APACHES.

News Sent to Guthrie's that Five Hundred More Savages Have Broken Out.

Sulphur Springs Valley in the Hands of the Murderers at Last Accounts.

Accounts of Pillage and Rapine—Stock Stolen—Soldiers Not Eager to Fight.

Two Men Killed and One Badly Wounded by a Band of Apaches.

TOMBSTONE, April 29.—Sorgum Smith, James Finlay, and Harry Clifford have just arrived, conveying intelligence that T. J. Florney and James Toubley have been killed and Jack Fife badly wounded. Between fifty and 100 Indians attacked the camp in the forenoon, killing the two named and wounding Fife, who managed to hide among the brush until the savages retreated. About sixty men are employed in the vicinity, but only those named were present at the time. The Indians stole ten head of mules and burned the cabin.

SULPHUR SPRINGS VALLEY

is one mass of flame. All the ranches are burned, including that of County Treasurer Dunbar. Forty-six head of horses belonging to Clinton Bros. were run off from the Soldiers' Home. The men employed at Clute's Camp have left. Sorgum Smith applied to the ostensible commander of the rangers for assistance, but could find no person willing to assume the responsibility for that organization. He applied to Jackson, the Captain, for aid, but was informed that the horses had sore backs and were unable to do duty. Much apprehension is felt for the safety of families in the vicinity of the scene of the disturbance.

The Ranches on the Gila River Fortified for Defense.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

TUCSON, Ari., April 29.—The following telegram was received today, the first part of which as yet lacks confirmation:

LORDSBURG, April 29.—Solomon, of San Simon, sent a special messenger on the night of the 27th to Guthrie's ranche and requested him to notify all persons on the Gila River that 500 White Mountain Apaches had broken out from the San Carlos Reservation and were heading for the Gila. A son of Capt. Lawson, who was recently killed by the Indians at Gold Gulch, arrived at Guthrie's from Clifton yesterday with dispatches of a similar tenor. There are over thirty men at Guthrie's, well fortified. A force well fortified is also located at Lightfoot ranch, half a mile below Guthrie's, and active preparations for vigorous defense are being made all along the river. The great want is a sufficient supply of arms and ammunition.

Troops Ordered to Be in Readiness to Go to Arizona.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

OMAHA, Neb., April 29.—Gen. George Crook, commander of the Department of the Platte, has received orders from Gen. Sheridan to hold the Third Cavalry and the Fourth Infantry in readiness to move to Arizona at a moment's notice.

A Smelter Shut Down.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

TUCSON, Ari., April 29.—The smelter of the Detroit Mining Company has shut down. It is situated six miles from the mine, and it was impossible to find any one willing to run the risk of hauling ore that far.

Agent Tiffany's Explanation of Its Cause.

To the Editor of the New York Times: My attention has been called by several gentlemen who are interested in Arizona to dispatches from Washington and elsewhere in your Sunday's issue headed: "Indian outbreak, outside greed the evident cause," etc. As I presume you desire to give the public correct information, at the request of the above-named gentlemen I respectfully state that the coal-fields, or anything connected with them, have nothing to do either with the Indian trouble on the San Carlos Reservation last fall or at the present time. On the discovery of the coal-fields there was considerable excitement among the Indians, who feared that another large slice would be cut off from the reservation without remuneration to them, as the reservation had been reduced five times in six years to appease the rapacity or avarice of outsiders. At these times the Indians knew nothing of mining gold or silver (except placer mining), and said little and made no opposition. Having seen mills and villages grow up and mines worked, they have learned their value, and now they want some compensation for their benefit from the coal. A gentleman came from Washington saying he was authorized by the department to see if the Indians would lease their coal on a royalty. I informed him the Indians could not make a lease but could consent that the Government or department could do so. The Indians came to the council, and after everything was explained to them by four interpreters, so there should be no mistake in regard to their understanding what they were doing, they signed a paper giving the Government or department their consent to its making a lease of the coal and minerals on their reserve for certain royalties, to be paid to the Government for their benefit, and to enable the necessary appropriations for their support to be reduced; granting privileges of making roads, etc., but the same not to interfere with their agricultural lands or water privileges.

They are willing the community should have the benefits of the coal and mineral on just and equitable terms. So it will be seen that all that has been done is that the Indians have consented that the Government can utilize any discoveries of coal or mineral for their benefit.

The outbreak was not caused by this. The records at the Interior and War Departments will show that that was caused by disaffection made by a crazy medicine man, who agreed to raise some dead chiefs if the Indians would pay him. They brought ponies, saddles, bridles, blankets, and such things as Indians prize, but the dead did not rise. The Indians threatened the medicine man, when he went into the medicine lodge and returned saying the dead could not come back until the whites were out of the country, adopting this ruse to save his own neck. As medicine men have great influence among the tribes many believed it, and held dances, etc., getting the Indians excited, which ended in it being necessary to arrest or kill the disturber. The medicine man told the Indians if he was killed and cut in pieces he would all come together again, and be alive in three days, and would be their leader against the whites. After his being killed, they waited for his resurrection, and as his body only kept getting more putrid, after a week or two, the bands saw their error and came into the agency and surrendered, being promised a fair trial and good counsel, with assurance that they would receive no promise of immunity from punishment if found guilty of crime.

In trying to gather mutinous scouts the Chiricahuas were driven out of the reserve, but in going left Loco's band, among which were many women and children belonging to those who went out. Loco has been friendly to the whites. This last raid has been the return of these men for their families, and they surrounded Loco's camp and have taken his men, many of whom, no doubt, were willing to go, and the women and children. Loco's band consisted of about thirty men and 300 women and children. In pursuing these renegades my chief scouts and some of the Indians have been killed, but as these Indians went off the reservation I could not have them pursued further, as I am not allowed to use my scouts off the reserve. The fact that the Chiricahuas escaped to Mexico unpunished last fall from the reserve no doubt emboldens them in this last raid. I do not think any of the reservation Indians are affected except those who were renegade United States scouts, and perhaps a few who escaped from the military after I turned the prisoners over to them last fall. The rest of the Indians, I believe, are contented, and are making rapid progress toward civilization in agricultural and other pursuits.

J. C. TIFFANY,
United States Indian Agent.

THE RED CROSS SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Red Cross Society of Chicago was held at the Sherman House last evening. Judge John E. Jameson was called to the chair. The object of the meeting was to appoint working committees for buying and shipping supplies in times of National calamity. A letter just received by Dr. Burnett from Miss Clara Barton, President of the American Association at Washington, was read, in which Miss Barton says: "Letters have just arrived from Prof. Hubbell, Vicksburg, and the Rev. Thomas W. White, a State agent in charge, from which we have directed extracts to be taken for inclosure to Chicago and Rochester. We have asked both of the latter to kindly furnish garden-seeds both in small quantities to the individual parties named, also in larger quantities to the Red Cross Society at Vicksburg, and decide to favor your society, or Chicago, if it choose, to send some barrels of seed corn, and some boxes of assorted tableware and cooking utensils to the address of the Rev. Thomas Ward White, Charleston, Miss." Mr. White's letter closes with the following: "You can form no idea of the state of things. The levees are strewn with dead carcasses of drowned and starved animals, while over and anon the heart is harrowed by the sight of a little mound in which sleeps the form of some nameless little one buried in the wild confusion of the overflow. I have followed in the track of a devastating army, and the picture was not half so terrible." "We thought, perhaps," writes Miss Barton, "that your new and splendid society might be pleased to provide for these wants."

Messrs. B. P. Moulton, E. M. Phelps, and H. E. Sargent were chosen a committee on buying and shipping supplies. On motion of Prof. Swing this committee was authorized to employ an agent to solicit subscriptions and act under direction of the Executive Committee.

Mr. E. I. Galvin was chosen a committee of one to act with the Executive Committee in renting an office for the headquarters of the Red Cross Society, where a storeroom might be provided to receive supplies, and where the business-meetings might be held.

Mr. Toure Löfrring, of Sweden, an active member of the Red Cross Society, then gave an interesting account of the practical workings of the society in that country, and exhibited a diagram of the methods of binding up wounds on the battlefields, etc.

It is earnestly hoped that Chicago will promptly and liberally respond to the call for aid along the Mississippi. It only needs that the appeal should be made to the Corn Exchange tomorrow to secure all the supplies wanted in seed-grain, and other merchants will contribute the rest.

CRIMINAL NEWS.

A Man Claiming to Be a Relative of "Buffalo Bill," the Actor and Scout, Arrested for Robbery—Other Misdeeds in Various Parts of the Country.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

ATCHISON, Kas., April 29.—A party named William H. Cody was arrested for robbery yesterday, and is in jail to await the action of the District Court. When searched bunches of keys, two revolvers, scissors, nippers, and other burglarious tools were found on him. He also had a diary containing the names of Ella and William Weaver, Ottawa, Ill.; a note for $150 payable to J. R. McAlpin, Clarinda, Ia.; a receipt given to William H. Weaver for $35, signed by H. L. Hosack, Ottawa, Ill., as well as other such papers. The evidence is sufficient that he is the leading spirit of that gang of operators who have tried to flood Kansas and Missouri with forged and raised checks and drafts. He is remarkably cool, and claims relationship with William F. Cody, the actor and scout. From lithographs of the latter a resemblance is noticed.

CLEVELAND, O., April 29.—Several hundred men are scouring the vicinity of Galion, searching for a negro named Jerry Myers, who yesterday brutally ravished a 13-year-old girl named Barbara Rettig, whom he found by the roadside, and gagged and dragged into the woods. The excitement is intense. If found, he will be summarily dispatched.

BURLINGTON, Vt., April 29.—Specials from Sweetsburg, Quebec, state that Edward Peters was hanged there yesterday. Edward Peters and Clara Peters, his wife, were convicted of murdering by torture and starvation their adopted child, a boy of 7 years, at Mansonville, Quebec, last November, but the woman only received a sentence of ten years' imprisonment at hard labor in the Kingston Penitentiary. The murder was of the most fiendish nature.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 29.—The detectives tonight arrested Theodore Stier, who is wanted at East Liverpool, O., on a charge of burglary and larceny. He arrived here Thursday night. The detectives caught him within an hour after his description had been telegraphed. It is learned that he had trouble about a patent right, and recently entered the house of a citizen at East Liverpool, with whom he was dealing, and carried off some valuables.

SHREVEPORT, La., April 29.—At Lismore, on Black River, one Clark, a tramp painter, shot and killed Thomas S. Harper, Postmaster and Justice of the Peace, in a row about a drink of whisky. Joseph Padello has been sentenced to hang June 9, in Lafayette Parish, for the murder of his wife four weeks ago.

A MILWAUKEE SENSATION.

The Streets Crowded with People Last Night Owing to a Concerted Arrest of Disreputables and Miserables.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 29.—At about 10 o'clock tonight the police made a well-planned raid upon the houses of ill-fame. Fifteen places were pulled and eighty-three persons were arrested. It is the largest raid ever made in this city and rich and poor shared alike. The Central Police Station is literally overflowing with the unfortunate individuals, and the street is lined for a distance of a block with an excited throng of friends or persons impelled to the place by curiosity. Chief Wason stated that the raid was made in deference to public sentiment, and he thinks that he will be fully sustained in the proceeding. He also says that the lesson was greatly needed, owing to the increasing boldness of the inmates of the houses. The determination was to do thoroughly, if at all. Of the eighty-three persons, sixty-two are females and twenty-one are well-known men. A good many of them are obtaining bail. It is estimated that the fines will add $3,000 or $4,000 to the City Treasury. The raid was conducted by Lieut. Janssen. About two-thirds of the entire police force were brought into service, and a murder, a lynching, or a conflagration could not stir up greater excitement in the community. It is in keeping with the raid upon the gamblers which has resulted in closing every gambling-room in the city. The new city administration purposes to be a model in the matter of public morality and it is taking hold of the business before it with vigor and skill. Of course public sentiment will not be entirely upon the side of the Mayor and the Chief of Police, but they are fully satisfied that the course taken is for the best interests of the community, and will be generally indorsed.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

The People of Milwaukee Incensed Against the Steamship Companies.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MILWAUKEE, April 29.—It is a startling fact that all the bad cases of small-pox with which the authorities are troubled have been brought here by immigrants. There is a shameful neglect of the disease at New York, or people would not be allowed to spread all over the country. There are in the First Ward four cases of small-pox in a cluster of four houses which are on a small lot but forty feet in width, and which contains twenty-nine human beings, living like beasts in filth and stench. It was brought by a Polish family a short time ago from the old country. A young man had the disease when he arrived here, and has since got well and is at work. All the remaining members of the four families have been exposed. Neighbors have been going out and in to these houses since the epidemic has broken out, and the neighborhood surrounding the place is filled with children. The infected houses are on Sobieski street, Nos. 921, 923, 925, and 929. Dr. Martin says there are too many to be removed to the hospital, and they will be placed in strict quarantine. During the first of next week some interesting developments will be made regarding the suppression of these cases.

Eight New Cases in Chicago.

New cases of small-pox were reported yesterday from No. 3110 Archer avenue, No. 581 West Erie, No. 122 West Indiana, No. 276 South Robey, No. 171 Clybourn avenue, No. 156 Erie, No. 102 Menominee, and No. 139 Wesson. Deaths from the disease occurred at No. 19 Weed, No. 57 Bissell, and No. 83 Hastings street. William Hoffmann, from No. 256 Henry street, died at the pest-house.

A Case of Small-Pox at Decatur, Ill.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

DECATUR, Ill., April 29.—Last evening Miss Mary White, who recently came here from the East, was found ill with the small-pox at the Central House. She was removed to the pest-house. She is a niece of Col. N. A. White. No other cases in Decatur.

The grand jury yesterday presented thirty-seven true bills and fifty-eight no bills, after which they were discharged.

Dr. Jane E. Walton, of No. 48 South Peoria street, has returned from an extended trip through Arizona and New Mexico.

Alexander Geddes Esq., leaves this city today for a visit to Europe. Like a prudent man he engaged his passage across the ocean as long ago as last September.

During the busiest hours of the day, according to a careful computation, 810 West Division street-cars pass over the Lake, Randolph, Madison, and Van Buren street bridges every hour.

A lad named J. A. McDonald was arrested at an early hour yesterday morning near State and Monroe streets while stealing newspapers from the doorsteps. He was fined $10 by Justice Wallace.

Oliver Horlick and C. M. Clade, of London, England; Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Day, of Barbone, Queensland; Dr. T. M. Hocker, of Dunedin, New Zealand; and M. F. Weidenbach, of Adelaide, Australia, are at the Palmer.

Mr. P. D. Madigan, an employé of the firm of P. F. Ryan & Co., who is about to pay a visit to Europe, was yesterday presented by his employers and fellow-clerks with a handsome gold watch, as a token of their regard and esteem.

The temperature yesterday, as observed by Manasse, optician, No. 88 Madison street, Tribune Building, was as follows: 8 a. m., 49 degrees; 10 a. m., 51; 12 m., 54; 3 p. m., 52; 8 p. m., 50. Barometer, 8 a. m., 29.75; 8 p. m., 29.70.

Thursday night burglars forced entrance to the residence of Mr. Albert Jacks, No. 72 Laflin street, and got safely away with a valuable lot of wearing apparel and jewelry. Entrance was effected through a back gate, and then lifting out a pane of glass in a door opening into the kitchen and basement hall.

Officers Coleman and Lawler, of the Deering Street Station, last night at 9 o'clock came upon two thugs and thieves named John Cassidy and Patrick Hurley as they were in the act of robbing a butcher named Ed Miller at the corner of Main street and Archer avenue. They had him down, and had his watch out of the pocket.

The Coroner held an inquest on the body of H. Deshler Copland, the young man who was run over by the Hyde Park train at Douglas Station Friday morning, at St. Luke's Hospital yesterday. The jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts, and exonerated the company and the conductor in charge of the train from all blame.

The Coroner held an inquest upon August Johnson, 19 years of age, who died of injuries received by being run down on the evening of April 25 by grip car No. 516, on the State street line, near the corner of State and Thirtieth streets. The jury returned a verdict of accidental death, and exonerated the driver of the car from all blame.

John Gleason, of the Village of Jefferson, was arrested yesterday on a warrant sworn out before Justice Brown which charges that he made a deadly assault upon Katherine Shannis with "a brickbat placed in a handkerchief, the corners of which he held in his hand so as to make a handle with which to swing said brickbat." John gave bail in the sum of $500 to appear May 6.

There was an enormous rush at Mandel's yesterday of ladies eager to get the beautiful panels which that firm was giving out to their visitors. Of all the pretty cards which Chicago merchants have from time to time given to their patrons, this is the prettiest. It is really a work of art, and those ladies who were thoughtless enough not to go to Mandel's yesterday should be sure to call there tomorrow before the supply is exhausted.

Edward Gibbon, 12 years old, whose parents live at No. 179 Fulton street, was found at 6 o'clock yesterday morning lying under the sidewalk at the foot of a stairway leading to No. 57 North Union street, where he claims to have been thrown by an unknown drunken men at 10 o'clock the night before. The lad was suffering from a dislocation of the right shoulder and some minor bruises, and was taken for treatment to the County Hospital.

The third of the series of Raymond and Whitcomb Boston excursion parties, numbering 110 people, arrived at the Sherman House over the Lake Shore Road at 6 o'clock yesterday morning. The party is composed of residents of the "Hub" and towns in the vicinity, and is in charge of Luther L. Holden, of Boston, and E. R. Bridgman, of Northampton. The excursionists will leave for the West at 9 o'clock tomorrow by the Rock Island route.

Complaint is made that the health officers went to put a small-pox card on No. 290 Laflin street, were going to put it on the rear door, and only changed their minds and tacked it on the front of the building after a vigorous protest from the neighbors. Members of the family mingle freely, it is said, with the people in the vicinity, and a rag-peddler lately took away from the house a lot of rags. Some of the neighbors think this is vigilance with a vengeance.

Yesterday an order for the delivery of the Garfield memorial flowers, issued by Judge Gardner, of the Superior Court, was presented to Justice Robinson, who has had them in custody for several weeks on a writ of replevin. They were given up to the care of H. N. Eldridge, an old college-mate and friend of Garfield, who had been appointed custodian of them by Judge Gardner. This property consists of the Victoria wreath, the turnverein laurel wreath, the Brazilian floral lyre, and the Bolivian floral cross and anchor.

Cornelius Cannon, a teamster 48 years of age, living at the corner of Wendell and Franklin streets, accidentally fell from the seat of his truck on the crossing of Wells and Wendell streets at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and striking the pavement on his head, fractured the base of the skull. Dr. Leonard, who is in attendance upon him, has but little hope for recovery. Cannon has a wife and a large family of small children.

Mr. James K. Lake, the Superintendent of the West Division Railway Company, yesterday showed to a Tribune reporter a specimen of stone blocks for pavements, which the company proposes to try between its tracks on Randolph street, from Franklin to Fifth avenue. These blocks are of Wisconsin porphyry, a quality of stone much more durable and harder than Medina or Wisconsin so-called granite blocks. This pavement will no doubt be a success, and Mr. Lake has implicit faith in its lasting qualities. It costs about $2.70 a square yard laid.

The statements in Saturday's account of the suit of Hopson and others against Samuel W. Allerton were somewhat too broad. It was stated that the effect of the testimony of Dr. Piper, the microscopist, was to impeach the credibility of the evidence of Spaids. This was too strongly put, as the assertion which Prof. Piper was introduced to disprove had not been made by Spaids. The evidence will be continued tomorrow, when Mr. Spaids' turn will come to rebut the attacks made on his reputation.

The Benevolent Order of Independent Foresters of Illinois will give a grand musical and literary entertainment and ball Thursday evening, May 4, at McCormick Hall, and a good time is assured, as the committee have made all necessary arrangements to render it a very elegant affair, having secured some of the best talent in the city, including the Chicago Lady Quartet, Prof. Frederick Boscovitz, pianist; Prof. J. Gill, Prof. J. Morse, Prof. H. M. Dickson, elocutionist; Chicago Male Quartet, and others. The proceeds are to be devoted to the benevolent work of the order.

Mr. I. R. Trask, the President, S. H. Soyster, the Secretary and Treasurer, Dr. J. H. Leslie, medial examiner, and Messrs. W. De Wolf and J. J. Gilmore constitute a committee of the Western Commercial Travelers' Association of St. Louis. They arrived here yesterday and held an informal meeting in the Tremont House last evening for the purpose of receiving applications for membership from members of the Northwestern Traveling-Men's Association of this city. Commercial drummers can belong to both organizations, and it is desired to strengthen the St. Louis association by gaining members here. Several applications were accepted last evening. The committee remain here through today.

The Commercial Club held their regular monthly meeting, followed by a banquet last evening at the Palmer House. There were about sixty present. The Chairman read a paper on the subject of the importance of the work being done by the consolidated charities in other cities in the way of exterminating pauperism, and urging the adoption of the system in this city. Mr. Henry W. King presented a report showing the work done by the Relief and Aid Society during the past seventeen years. The only thing done in connection with the proposed manual school was the announcement that $68,000 had been subscribed. On this declaration $12,000 was subscribed on the spot, making $80,000 of the $100,000 needed.

Up to a late hour last night nothing of interest had been ascertained concerning the floater found in the river at Twenty-second street during the forenoon. Several people called at the Morgue for the purpose of identifying the corpse. One thought it was the body of Capt. Nelson, a sailor who has been missing for about three weeks with $200 cash in his possession, but was by no means positive. The police think the body is that of some laboring man. It is by no means certain that the wounds which the police took to be bullet wounds were actually produced by bullets, and it will require a close examination of the body and perhaps a post-mortem examination to determine whether there is any ground to the suspicion that it is a case of foul play.

About thirty sports left the city in carriages about 10:30 Friday night to participate in a cocking main, which was held at the road-house of "Shang" Noyes, near Grand Crossing. There were seven cocks in the main, and the sports had the pleasure of witnessing eleven fights without interference from the police, who were in profound ignorance of the affair. The first match was between a blinker red and a spangle, the latter winning. A number of mains were fought on the general terms of $100 a side. A blinker weighing four and a half pounds won a main from a red-breast bird in seven flies. The concluding main was a match for $50, in which the same blinker, weight 4½ pounds, was matched against a spangle cock weighing 4¾ pounds, the blinker cock winning by a gaff strike in five flies. All the parties to the main were back in the city by 4 a. m., highly delighted at their success in eluding the police.

At half-past 10 o'clock Tuesday morning a number of gentlemen will visit Judge Caton's Crushing Works at Bridgeport for the purpose of seeing how granite bowlders, which have long vexed the souls of Illinois farmers, may be ground to powder and utilized for road-making purposes. The powerful machinery at the Judge's works takes one of these bowlders and reduces it to minute fragments, just the size for macadamizing Chicago streets. It has long been a question how to dispose of these relics of the glacial period, and an ineffectual attempt to settle it has been made of late years by men who traveled around with a drill and a little powder to blast these rocks, but Judge Caton has now come upon the field with more powerful machinery, and offers the farmers of Illinois an easy way to get rid of all the rocks which are heaped up on their farms.

A full meeting of the members of the Calumet Equestrian Club was held Friday evening at the Riding Academy, Sixteenth street and Michigan avenue, and eighteen additional names were presented for membership. In consequence of the more than expected demand for admission to the club, it has been resolved by the association to raise the initiation fee of $50 to $100 after the enrollment of fifty members has been completed. The Governing Committee has already commenced negotiations for a suitable building for the indoor exercises, the present quarters being too limited. The first excursion to the parks will take place in the course of a few days. The ladies will be required to wear dark riding habits, silk hats, and light gloves; the gentlemen silk hats and tan-colored gloves. The members of the club are anticipating great enjoyment and pleasure from these outdoor equestrian exercises during the summer months. The next business meeting will take place at the Riding Academy Wednesday evening.

The Philosophical Society met last evening in the Central Music-Hall Building and listened to an interesting paper on the "Basis of Morals," prepared and read by Judge Booth. An election of officers resulted as follows: President, Van Buren Denslow; Vice-Presidents, J. W. Ela, Helen S. Shedd, Dr. A. Reeves Jackson; Corresponding Secretary, Josiah H. Bissell; Recording Secretary, Miss Caroline Smith; Treasurer Emmet C. Fisher; Executive Committee, Prof. Rodney Welch, Austin Bierbower, Mrs. Celia P. Wooley, Julia Holmes Smith, M. D., George H. Broomell; Sanitary Committees—Social Science, Prof. Rodney Welch, Mrs. Kate N. Doggett, Col. A. N. Waterman; Moral Science, Mrs. Celia P. Wooley, the Rev. H. W. Thomas D. D., Mrs. John W. Ela; Natural Science, Prof. George D. Broomell, Prof. Samuel Willard, Prof. H. D. Garrison; Current History, Julia Holmes Smith, M. D., Henry Booth, C. B. Waite; Speculative Philosophy, Austin Bierbower, Prof. Lewis J. Block, the Rev. Dr. R. A. Holland; Trustees, Gen. N. B. Byford, Telford Burnham, Edmund W. Burke, Bronson C. Keeler, and I. N. Stiles.

HE FAILED TO TURN OVER.

Justice Robinson held Isaac Greenebaum to the Criminal Court in bonds of $1,000 on a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. The complainants were Messrs. Stafford & Murphy, the North Side liverymen. Some time ago they wanted to raise $1,000. They made out two notes of $500 each and gave them to Greenebaum, who is a money-broker, to negotiate. Greenebaum sold the notes, but, according to his own evidence, failed to turn the money over to the firm. A few weeks ago the firm was called upon to pay the notes, and then it was, through the aid of Messrs. Sears and Foster, that the prosecution against Greenebaum was commenced. Greenebaum claimed to have met with reverses and that he intended all along to turn over the money received on the notes.

PROBABLE FOUL PLAY.

A floater was recovered from the river at Lumber street yesterday morning, and the police say it is a murder case. The body was well marked with what appeared to be bullet and knife wounds. There was one hole back of the left ear, another in the left shoulder, a knife wound in the fleshy portion of the right hip and another on the right shin. The body is that of a man about 25 years old, and with black hair and mustache, old clothes, no shoes, and only one sock. It is thought possible that the corpse may be that of the young man Sears, who came to Chicago from Indiana about ten days ago, on his way to Honduras, Central America, and mysteriously disappeared somewhere between here and Englewood. The body was removed to the morgue. The post-mortem examination will probably show whether or not the wounds are what they appear to be.

DECORATIVE FURNITURE is a necessity after the "moving accidents" of the 1st of May. The largest as well as the most popular manufacturers of and dealers in frames, moldings, cornice-poles, mirrors, easels, engravings, etc., our city affords is Sammons, Clark & Co., 207 and 209 East Randolph street.

If you're waking, call me early, call me early, mother dear;
Tomorrow'll be the maddest time of all the mad new year—

It is of interest that Dr. Justin Hayes has released for five years his present central location, 167 Wabash av., adjoining the Palmer House. He has five stories which have just been repainted and furnished preparatory for his summer guests. To his already elaborate electrical means, he has added two of the latest improved static machines. During his twenty years of practice in Chicago he has perfected a system of combined treatment that is deserving of the high appreciation in which it is held by his patrons and friends.

The sensitive young lady who was "moved to tears" has the rheumatism. Moral: Never move into a wet locality.

That I. E. Brabrook, the merchant tailor located at 172 Clark street, makes suits that suit is evident from the large patronage he receives from all classes of society. The new styles and substantial patterns he exhibits in the best productions of domestic and foreign looms, with the skillful tailor artists he always employs, make the certainty of a perfect "suit" a foregone conclusion.

A recent telegram from the Hot Springs, Ark., announced that "Senator Logan arrived in a weak condition, but was able to take his first bath." This satisfactorily explains the darkness of the Senator's skin.

The changes incident to May moving will bring many strangers into the vicinity of the popular grocery house of A. E. Dore & Co., 582 West Madison street. To such we wish to say that they will find this firm perfectly reliable, their goods the best, and prices the lowest.

Picked out your summer-resort yet?—Boston Post. Not yet. Tired of all of them and sick of Europe. Have half a notion to stay home for a change.—Philadelphia News. Editors are always short of "change" whether at home or abroad.

Handsome patterns in fancy underwear and hosiery in fine and medium grades and seasonable weights, are shown by Brown & Prior, 163 and 165 Wabash avenue.

In a recent sermon Beecher said that a mother recently asked her daughter: "What do you intend giving up during Lent?" "Ma," she said with great earnestness, "I have about resolved to give up brushing my teeth." St. Louis girls don't brush their teeth on Sunday because the commandment says thou shalt not do any work.

D. F. Bremner informs us that everything is O. K. at his bakery, and he is filling all orders for his celebrated Eureka milk bread, stamped on each loaf "D. F. B." To obtain the original see that the loaf bears no other letters.

The following composition was prepared by a schoolboy who knows nothing of the Chicago Board of Aldermen: "The peg is a thing to hang other things on to keep them from falling. It cannot easily be broken, but can be pulled out at any time. If anything is hanging on the peg when it is pulled out that thing falls down."

Parties moving to the South Side and desiring paper-hanging done by artists should call on D. T. Walker, 2136 Wabash avenue, and view his elegant stock of latest designs and leave their orders, which will receive prompt attention.

Sarah Bernhardt carried a Greek across the Continent to London, married him, and rushed off to Madrid, where she is now taking him to the bull-fights. The fragility of Sarah's health prevented a regular bridal tour.

Those beautiful Blumeys, Cheviots, and Warwicks will soon be gone. For spring they are the best goods. Turner, 85 Madison street, fine tailor.

"Are girls worth anything?" is a recent high-class conundrum. That depends. Some girls are worth $250,000 in their own right, and some girls aren't worth a cent of money, and yet their value cannot be estimated.

Among the changes this spring we hear of one instance where the fittings and decorations will cost from $5,000 to $8,000, and the room is only 16x50 feet. Nat Faxon, 212 Wabash avenue, has the decorating, of course.

A paper-hanger in Utica, N. Y., having seen what he shouldn't while working in the house of a citizen there, put in his demands for hush-money. He got several sums, a mortgage, and a year's imprisonment.

The classes at H. B. Bryant's Chicago Business College always fill up rapidly about the 1st of May. Visitors gladly welcomed.

A Brooklyn young woman said people condemned suicide for being immoral, wicked, and all that sort of thing, but as for her she considered it very ill-bred. It was like going to a party without being invited.

There must be many good qualities in "Our Little Beauty" cigarettes or they would not have grown into popular favor so rapidly as they have.

A French composer named Adam was once asked to furnish the words to an opera called "Eve." He declined because he said if Adam was tempted by Eve the public would probably play the part of the serpent and hiss.

Cooper, the popular hatter, 134 Clark street, can supply any of the latest styles of any size or color. "Low prices."

An Oxford under-graduate called out to his creditor, "Get out, you ornithorhynchus!"

The man departed meekly.

"Who's that?" inquired a friend of the speaker.

"An ornithorhynchus."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, Webster defines him as 'a beast with a bill.'"

Call and give the popular tailors Upham & Purinton a house-warming this week at their new store, 191 Madison street.

Dr. Rogers mentions a Kincardineshire husbandman who was expressing to his minister the high opinion he had of his personal virtues, and he wound up his eulogy by saying, "An' I a'ways, and specially, liket your sterling independence, sir. I hae a'ways said, sir, that ye neither fear God nor man."

Brown's improved furnaces are taking the lead. R. K. Brown, 2106 Wabash avenue.

A clever actress was playing Juliet to a crowded house in the country. As she lay dead in the tomb, she contrived to ask Romeo how the scene was going. "Beautifully," he answered; "the people in the pit have to put up umbrellas to prevent being drowned by the tears of those in the gallery."

Brown & Prior's recent importations embrace house coats, office coats, traveling ulsters, and lawn-tennis jackets in endless variety.

A returned East Indian was complimented on his genial disposition and large-heartedness. "Yes," he replied, "I need less heart, but more liver."

It does aggravate a man to think that while his wife isn't afraid to tackle him and nearly yank his head off, she is madly terrorized by a cow that he can chase out of the yard at any time.

The finest crayon portraits are those by Ahlborn, 335 West Madison street.

A minister had occasion one Sabbath to supply the pulpit of a neighboring brother, whose wife was distinguished for her extreme parsimony. On being asked next morning by the hospitable lady of the manse if he would eat an egg for breakfast, he replied: "Yes, madam, I always eat one when I cannot get two."

Housekeepers should examine the incomparable oil-stoves of Reddy & Co., 167 Adams.

"Whom does this portrait represent?"

GEORGIA POLITICS.

The Independent Movement Lacking in Brains and Financial Influence—Dissatisfaction with Bourbon Misrule—A Brighter Prospect in the Future.

The Hon. O. A. Lochrane, formerly Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Georgia, and now general counsel for the Pullman Palace-Car Company, was found at the Grand Pacific Hotel last evening, having just returned from an extended business trip through the South. Knowing that Judge Lochrane had taken a prominent part in Georgia politics, a reporter of The Tribune asked him to give his views on the present political situation, and the following conversation was had:

"What, in your opinion, Judge, are the chances for the success of the Independent movement in Georgia?"

"In my recent trip through Georgia, from all the conversations which I held with prominent men of that State, as well as from my general acquaintance with its politics, I feel satisfied that there is an incapacity among the Independent leaders, as well as a want of financial influence, to control a majority of the voters of that State. There is most certainly existing a great deal of dissatisfaction with the Bourbon element in politics and a desire to throw off the incubus of incompetent leadership. But on the other hand there is among the masses a feeling that the Independent movement is essentially a Republican one, and the name Republican is a bugbear to the ignorant and prejudiced population, who know of the Republican party only through the misrepresentations of party hacks and party presses."

"Then you think there is small chance of success for the Independent movement?"

"I have no doubt that if the Republican party of Georgia were united and the dissatisfied members of the Democratic party, or the Independents, as they may be called, would in good faith unite with them, there would be a large majority of the voters in favor of

THROWING OVERBOARD THE BOURBON LEADERS.

The Democratic party at the South has been nothing since the close of the War but a mean representation of the worst principles that ever attempted to govern and control the destinies of a people."

"You do not seem to have much faith in Democratic rule?"

"Among the Democratic party there are men of very eminent ability, but I do not know of a single public man in Georgia, with the exception of Alex. H. Stephens, who is not influenced by his ambition and love for public place and power, and we have not had at the South since the War a single political leader who dared to confront public opinion. They have all pandered to public sentiment, and the most brilliant men on the Southern press have been afraid to utter a single honest opinion on public affairs. Hence Democratic rule in the South has been a mere desire to control votes for political purposes at the expense of all the material interests which the South has. From the Governor down to the last floating vote the course of public opinion has been to accomplish the end of electing some man to office on the theory of his opposition to the Republican party, and he who was the loudest defamer of Republican principles was held the strongest available candidate."

"Well, Judge, do you believe in the practicability of this new Independent movement?"

"For myself I am in favor of anything that will enlarge the scope and influence of intelligent opinion—that will give the colored man at the South a free and fair opportunity to vote as his judgment may dictate—that will give an honest count of votes by honest men, free from all influence or intimidation."

"Then you think there has been intimidation practiced?"

"Unquestionably, and it is due to the Southern gentlemen to state that they have acted throughout on the principle that the end justified the means, as they had been taught to believe that Republican success meant Southern adversity. But the South has become tired of their political leadership. The South largely favors a protective tariff, and is equally in favor of internal improvements by the National Government."

AS TO FOREIGN RELATIONS,

the South strongly favors even Mr. Blaine's aggressive policy in regard to the assertion of American interests abroad. The people are daily changing, without knowing it, to Republican principles. They have grown wiser in regard to the need of capital to develop their mineral and agricultural resources. Their faith in the perpetuity of American institutions and their growing National sentiment cannot be doubted. The only drawback to the South is their blind credulity in the leadership of a few public men who will soon die out. That section of this continent will then become in every material interest a part and parcel of a National government."

"What place will the colored man fill under the new order of things?"

"The colored voter of the South is easily tempted. His financial condition is generally at low ebb and a candidate with money can control the support of the colored man irrespective of his political principles. The few colored leaders ambitious for money can be influenced, but in the main I have great confidence in the integrity and loyalty of the colored voters to break down the rule of the Bourbons. The colored man (you know nothing about him up here) is generally thoughtful and indisposed to accept promises from those who have deceived him. He weighs results with more judgment than the world generally credits him with the possession of. He may listen to promises with respect while he knows them to be mere pretexts, but he is smart enough to see his own interests. In any political movement backed by sufficient influence and strength to give him hope of its success he will be found active and energetic, and if there shall be in Georgia or elsewhere at the South a free and fair election, it is my judgment that with the division of political parties now existing, the side on which the colored vote is honestly counted will be successful."

"Leaving politics, Judge Lochrane, is it the fact that recent decisions of the United States Courts have pronounced the Pullman Company a monopoly?"

"Quite the contrary. Judge Pardee in the Texas Pacific case held the exact reverse. He maintained the right of railroad companies to make exclusive contracts with the Pullman Company, and held in addition that where they had made such contracts the same were not obnoxious or subject to the objection suggested. He held that the contract between the Texas Pacific and the Pullman Company for the exclusive use of their cars was valid and subsisting for the nine years it has yet to run."

THE DRAM-SHOP LAW.

A Woman Sues Several Elgin Saloon-keepers for Damages for Causing the Death of Her Husband.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

Elgin, Ill., April 29.—An interesting lawsuit is in progress in the Kane County Circuit Court. The plaintiff, Mrs. Thomas Naughten, brought suit against fifteen Elgin saloonkeepers and the owners of buildings in which several of the saloons are for $5,000 damage sustained through the death of her husband, who was killed here last fall by falling from a moving train while intoxicated. Naughten was a dissipated person, and the declaration so recites, and damage is claimed for causing him to so become, as well as for his death. The case was yesterday dismissed as to all of the defendants except J. Freiler, B. Hagelow, H. Holthusen, C. Lay, H. Tetzner, and J. Buckrice, saloonkeepers proven to have sold him intoxicants, and Robert Beckwith, who owns the building where Tetzner is located. It is probable a verdict for plaintiff will be found. If so the case will be appealed and fought through the highest court.

Brink, of Utah, and a large posse. On Friday the Sheriff's posse came suddenly upon another gang of thieves. During the engagement Bowman and Brink were both killed. A large party of citizens is now in pursuit of the thieves.

NEW YORK, April 28.—Few men in civil life, without some large basis in family fortune or following, have attained the political significance, not to say influence, of ex-Secretary and Senator and Speaker Blaine. I have often told in your columns of his course from boyhood upward; but as there is an ever-arising stream of readers wishing to take up the files of the journals, but not having them at hand, I will run over a few points of the life and character of Blaine—the more so that he is at this moment the hero of another episode and jealously watched by the aspirants in both parties for the high places of the country.

Blaine has not been an eminent man as long as your more youthful readers would think. I can distinctly remember when he was so comparatively obscure, though a member of Congress, that I had to ask some questions about him. And that was only in the year 1868. He was then 38 years old, and is now 52. I looked down from the gallery of Congress upon a long-legged man with a rather highwayman sort of pose and attitude. He had a way of planting his good fine legs in one attitude and then turning his body and looking over his shoulder, swinging his body without moving his legs; and his peculiar eyes—which are of a hazel color, quite large and very round, or very flat, I forget which—shone with a certain audacity, like a fine Irishman's of the Charles Lever school.

In those days he always looked to me like a fine Irish 'Squire, who could ride after the hounds and run for Parliament, and be attended by no end of small tenants and family followers. He generally wore a bluish or black suit of clothes, with something of a tendency for a swallow-tailed coat; and his very clear, almost waxen complexion, and his pleasing length of face breaking into a smile while he spoke to you, remained in the impression. He was then about to run for the Speakership of Congress against Henry L. Dawes, of Massachusetts, to succeed Schuyler Colfax. Colfax had been a brisk, pretty bright Speaker, under whom the business of Congress went on smoothly, and he had held the place during several Congresses, when, almost accidentally, he was nominated to be Vice-President with Grant, and the young and old bloods in Congress, while there was a large Republican majority, began to compete for the position. Blaine made such a rapid, dashing canvass that Dawes withdrew in a very little while, though he pouted at his defeat, and his friends said Blaine resorted to means below Dawes. Something has to be said, however, by a beaten man and his friends; and I have no doubt that Blaine was elected by his superior natural popularity.

The Republican party had four Speakers before Blaine—Pennington, Banks, Grow, and Colfax. I think any fair observer will say that Blaine, in resources and natural leadership, altogether exceeded the others.

Blaine labored under the disadvantage, with some of the most fastidious public men, of having been a little of a jobber from the very start. That scruple concerning him has followed him hard; and, while many worse men have taken advantage of it to continue to prejudice Blaine, it can be said that his defeat, in spite of his great popularity, is a warning to public men to let the lobby alone, early and late. Yet it often happens that the same thing which overthrows a man in his highest aspiration is the means of his success in wordly comfort. Blaine is not President, but he is comfortable. He has reaped where he sowed. Entertaining the American desire to raise his family above want, he has fully succeeded in that particular. But he has lost the great dignity to which his heart aspired.

I have no other knowledge of his lobby connections but what is a matter of record. It is said that he was the agent for an arms manufacturing company during the War. After the War he took some hand in the innumerable railroad schemes before Congress. Probably his connection with all these things was but small, but it was enough to smirch him a little, and a very little smirching becomes an awful scar when a man by his talents rises high enough to have every magnifying glass in the country turned upon him. As Speaker he was one of the most brilliant who ever filled the chair. He had a salient character and a free tongue, and made enemies like himself, sharp, salient, and piquant. But he possessed a temperament rare in public life, which flashed out, gladdened, and took hold of people, and continued to build him up like an actor who draws all over the country and yet is pronounced by a few critics in each community not to be fine enough.

His temperament, while his strength, was also his weakness. It made him depend upon his momentary impressions and associations for his success. He was so elastic that you could see ever and anon beneath his set that there were no permanent foundations. He was like an Ariel putting a belt around the world every forty minutes or so; and yet you were not certain where you could find him any five minutes in the day. The feminine qualities had a masculine development in him. He was witty, hospitable, warm, bright, and took hold of things immediately and made them charming. He was not a genius to the extent men supposed. I recollect when he was made Speaker and delivered his address at the opening of Congress that he had it written on slips of paper and put upon his desk, and, being in the gallery right over his head, I looked down upon those slips and thought to myself, Here is a man who prepares himself because his confidence is not that of strong talent.

He was a cosmopolitan, and men of that class generally fail to entwine their roots in some one established society or interest. He was born and bred in Pennsylvania, and was a local hero there; went to Kentucky, and was considered a broth of a boy; went off to Maine, and took hold almost instantly and became one of her great citizens; and, after becoming the most brilliant Congressional citizen of Washington, he seemed to sail all over the country and be enjoyed in every part of it. After going through two or three terms of the Speakership he went down on the floor, the Democrats coming into power, and became the leader of his party there. In almost every episode he was a bright, striking figure; and yet he was unconsciously antagonizing all the time certain momentary or rooted interests, which were finally bound to coalesce and make common cause against him.

On material questions, like internal improvements, foreign commerce, the spread of American influence, the honor of the flag, etc., he was a patriotic American boy, taking his principles from his early impulses. He was no John Quincy Adams, inquiring what might be the possible result of some policy twenty years hence. His blood being red, and his health perennial, he saw in every day's coming meat enough for action; and I think he never made predictions about the ruin of the country or the decay of moral influence, or set the past against the present in judgment. He mingled in the fights of every day with freshness and gladness, and a certain juvenile force delightful to all but those who had made up their minds not to admire him.

The influence of Thaddeus Stevens prevailed over the Republican party in Congress during the whole time of Mr. Blaine's Speakership, and after he retired from it to lead his party. He was divided in his allegiance between admiration for Stevens and dislike of his narrow personal sympathies. At one time he would assume to be with Stevens, and at another time would give up all that Stevens hated. Thus he fought the Force bill, which the Republicans designed to use to keep the Southern States in their train. He and Samuel J. Randall have the credit of beating the Force bill; but soon afterward Blaine repented that he had been too liberal, and he took up the bloody-shirt issue, so called, and had a great deal of fun in stampeding the various Rebel and Democratic leaders. Yet a very brilliant man is continually making unseen enemies. The very facility with which he generalizes and attacks, and the success attending his forays, create little minorities of opposition.

There was one element determined to persecute Blaine, whatever side he might take, and that was led by Roscoe Conkling. Several years before Blaine became Speaker, Conkling and he were young members of Congress, and they came to an issue about a man. Conkling was always seeking somebody to assault, and Blaine always finding somebody to protect and defend. Blaine has what is called a constructive disposition—ready to build up even the wrong man when he asks sympathy. Conkling, with a narrow nature, a severe temperament, a self-concentration, a sneering audacity, a sleepless envy, and a Scotch tenacity of making an organization and living within it, affected to dislike Blaine's means and processes, and Conkling's affectations he generally makes sincere to his own peculiar decision. Conkling had a large State, with more population in it than New England; and in addition to this great State he soon possessed himself of Grant's friendship and the whole support of the Federal Administration.

Blaine never had the least assistance from Grant's eight years of power; and after Hayes came into power, although he had been speedy to send a dispatch of sympathy to Blaine when he beat him for the nomination, yet he turned almost as cold a shoulder to Blaine and his friends as Grant had done. Blaine never had the countenance of the Federal Administration until Garfield was elected; and before he had become well warmed in his seat Garfield was killed. Fairminded people, in estimating these two men, will admit that Conkling was always fighting from the inside of power, and Blaine skirmishing on the outside. It was like the old Arabs in the Crusades, who had to ride around an enemy protected by battlements or walled in steel. Had Mr. Blaine enjoyed a very small portion of that official power tendered to Conkling, he would unquestionably have been the Republican candidate for President, whether elected or not.

Mr. Blaine's opposition to the Force bill and the genial attitude he maintained toward the Southern leaders lost him the support of nearly all the Southern States when he came in 1876 to be a candidate before the Cincinnati Convention. The Republican party's policy in the Southern States, however successful in one respect, was fatal to the continued success of the party. Yet it had the nominating power, and its vote at Cincinnati was divided between Morton, Conkling, and Bristow, and finally went off to Hayes in the general stampede. But the narrow escape Blaine had from receiving the nomination showed that he had made as brilliant advances toward carrying the whole party as he did in his Speakership contest toward carrying Congress. He wiped Conkling completely out as a Presidential possibility. Conkling managed to get a solid delegation from New York State, headed by the present Governor, Cornell; but to his disgust there were Blaine men on it—not probably made so by any overtures of Blaine, but by that interest in his temperament and good fellowship which the young men of the party felt in all the States.

From that time onward Mr. Conkling labored not to elect himself President, but to create some interest which could prevent Blaine from being the candidate. He found Gen. Grant to be the quantity he wanted. Grant took a dislike to Blaine soon after he became President, and I suspect it was on account of Blaine's free talking. When he heard a good thing he told it; and Grant, coming into the Presidency very crude, and keeping up some of his old military and careless company, was a subject for badinage and anecdotes. Blaine, however, never was a conspirator in the sense of telling anecdotes to wound and destroy a rival. He was a boon-fellow, and rattled off the gossip of the day in the most entertaining manner. Grant was sensitive and could not understand, with his temperament, that something sharp might be said about him without any great malice. The Conkling interest was eavesdropping, malignant, sinister, always ready to interpret anything Blaine had to say as connected with some deep, injurious plot. Before Grant left the Presidency he hated Blaine to that extent that he would make an issue with any of his friends who would support Blaine.

The peculiar circumstances under which Hayes took the Presidency let Grant out of that office with éclat he would not otherwise have enjoyed. During his second term events transpired which broke down the Republican majorities in many of the States, and brought in a Democratic Congress, which remained in power until last December. The anxiety, not only of the business element, but of the Unionists and Rebels alike, not to have any more war, gave Grant's calm military talents a fine display toward the close of his Administration, when he held the White House for Hayes and prepared to put down any political insurrection. Grant left the White House, and in a short time matured his scheme for a tour of the world, and he came back a Presidential quantity again—thanks to the labors of Conkling, Cameron, Logan, and the old State bosses, who wished to beat Blaine, and enjoy the patronage as formerly. The candidacy of Sherman was incidental to the scheme. Sherman had been a member of Hayes' Administration, and the power of that Administration was just sufficient to create a balance of power for Sherman—too weak to nominate him, but strong enough to keep Blaine from getting his natural supporters.

Blaine, however, carried the best of the States. He was sought in New England by the old Puritan school, and the bosses in New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and some of the Southern States fixed up a scheme of instructing delegates so as to nominate Grant. Yet it was patent in the Chicago Convention of 1880 that Blaine was the favorit of his party as much as he had been four years previously. The conspirators, however, achieved their main purpose. Though they failed to nominate Grant, they made the nomination of Blaine impossible, and to their amazement Garfield was the beneficiary. As soon as he was elected he recognized the popular feeling in the party by selecting Blaine to be his Secretary of State. Immediately the riot act was read to Garfield, and every effort was made to intimidate him from putting Blaine in his Cabinet. The hostility came from Conkling, and Gen. Grant was made the instrument of it.

I told Mr. Blaine in the Boriel Building, New York, that Grant, as I had heard, was going to make an issue with Garfield's Administration if he put Blaine in the Cabinet. My authority for saying so was Mr. John Russell Young, who told me at his room in the Astor House that if Blaine went into Garfield's Cabinet Gen. Grant would consider it a personal insult. I have no means of knowing whether that was Gen. Grant's true position or not other than Mr. Young's statement. Young had been with Grant on his tour around the world, and was in almost daily communication with him; and I concluded that such was the intention long before Garfield reached the Presidency.

The malignant purpose of Conkling to smother Blaine at any hazard was again apparent. Garfield, however, adhered to his selection, and Mr. Blaine became Secretary of State; and from the moment of his inauguration envy and intrigue were on foot to drive Blaine out of that Cabinet, or make the Administration a failure. If Mr. Blaine, knowing that this sleepless hostility continued against him, did advise Gen. Garfield to change the control of the New York Custom-House, or in some other way did operate upon Garfield to appoint Judge Robertson, he only retorted in self-defense. To have allowed the Conkling power to be continued was only to invite further aggression from it; and it designed to intimidate Garfield's Administration as it had done Hayes', and again make ready to overthrow Blaine in 1884, and Garfield also.

There was, however, another species of opposition, not so malignant against Blaine, but equally continuous and unappeasable. It consisted of the specialists—the moralists, the college men, the fine Pharisees of the Republican party. These took a grudge against Blaine for not being scrupulous enough in his political processes, and they disliked his protectionist and other positions, although he had been a consistent hard-money man, and one of the principal leaders on that side to array the Republican party against inflation. Blaine never fought before the country or in Congress any important feature of Grant's or Hayes' Administration. He was a loyal party man in his general bearing. He made no scandals in Maine or any other part of the Union against civil-service reform, nor undertook to disparage President Hayes when Conkling was hissing at the convention, and putting words into Tom Platt's mouth to fire the political class.

Garfield was killed, and Mr. Conkling, by an infernal torpedo, blew himself out of the Senate, from which Blaine had recently resigned to go into the Cabinet. Bright and aggressive as ever, he made the State Department the centre of attention while he remained in it. He took control of the country, virtually, during Garfield's long illness, and obtained general credit, except among those who were determined he should never have any. Upon Gen. Arthur's accession Blaine made way for his successor without the least remonstrance—showed thorough courtesy to Arthur, and assisted the country to be composed, and to welcome the Vice-President to the place to which a great crime had elevated him. Yet the popularity Blaine had thus acquired only inflamed the more the unforgiving elements, which would not let him rest.

As soon as Mr. Frelinghuysen entered the State Department an inspection of Blaine's management of it was begun; and, having reversed his policy toward the Spanish-American States, this miserable ape, Shipherd, was brought to the front to see if he could not scatter some evil smell to the prejudice of Blaine. And now both schools of malignants—the Conkling Stalwarts and the Schurz Specialists—are working hand in hand to make fools and idiots believe that a man as bright and worldly as Blaine made a bedfellow of this ape, who, in his general likeness and qualities, bears a remarkable resemblance to Tom Platt and the usual tools of Mr. Conkling.

The game is again on foot to break Blaine down for 1884. It may be successful, but such a success only carries contempt with it.

MORE HOTEL ROOM WANTED.

A TRIBUNE reporter last evening called upon Ald. Alvin Hulbert, of the Sherman House, to get from him if possible his ideas of what he would do in the future, and his plans in case he should vacate the hotel and deliver it over to the new lessee—Myron L. Pearce—on the 2d of July. Mr. Hulbert was not in what might be termed a talkative mood.

"My future plans," said he, "are at present undecided. I haven't left the old house yet, and when I leave there, if I do, I shall probably go to Colorado on a fishing excursion. But there is nothing definit known as yet as to my going out. I feel that I have been unfairly treated, but I am not at all unhappy about it."

"Will you build a new hotel?"

"I don't intend to build a hotel yet, at least not for the present. Brick and labor are high, you know, and I'd prefer waiting until some one get's tired. But, as I said before, I am still here and attending to business as usual."

"Isn't there room here for another first-class hotel?"

"There certainly is. All the hotels are doing all they can. We are kept to the test of our full capacity, and I think that there is plenty of room here for another first-class hotel. There is plenty of trade already for such a house, but by the time it could be built there would be an immense demand for it. We must have more hotels. The city is growing so fast that more hotel accomodations are needed. By the time that a mammoth new first-class house was ready there would be trade enough to fill it. You see the transient trade here will soon equal New York. The wholesale trade is centering here so largely that we are fast equaling the largest Eastern cities in this regard. Hotel property in Chicago will always prove profitable when properly run and managed."

"Will you vacate the Sherman House on the 2d of July?"

"That is not a fair question. I don't think that I will have to. In the meantime I am here, and keeping up the character of the house."

THE PERRY COUPLER.

We are glad to learn that there is one safety freight-car coupling which is fast earning a valuable record, for certainly there is need enough of it. The Chicago coupling, known as the Perry, is now in use on twenty-one roads, several of which, after thorough trial, have adopted it, and quite recently three of the New England roads have adopted it. Mr. Perry seeks competition and trial with any other coupling which has been so far tested as to have the papers of adoption by one or more roads. The inventor claims that he has arrived at his majority the second time. He first counted years, but now counts railroads, and with a success for the coming year in proportion to the past eight months, there will be 100 railroads using his coupling within 365 days from the date hereof.—Hartford Evening Post.

P. F. RYAN & CO., CORNER MADISON AND PEORIA STREETS.

Tomorrow will be the first anniversary of the opening of P. F. Ryan & Co.'s palatial dry-goods establishment on West Madison street. Prosperity has attended the enterprise from the day of its inauguration. The firm saw an opening and seized upon the tide of golden opportunity. As the city increases in size, the necessity for local trading-houses must also increase. The people—especially the ladies—do not care to travel miles to obtain goods which they can purchase at least as cheap, if not cheaper, nearer home. It is in these facilities and inducements that the strength and popularity of P. F. Ryan & Co. lie. They keep grades of goods suited to all classes of customers, from the finest of silks and other costly fabrics to the cheapest and most economical prints. Their stock of dry goods embraces every line, and is absolutely complete in all. No dry-goods house in the city is its superior, and the people of the West Side have no occasion to travel to the South Division to make their purchases. At the close of the firm's first year of unparalleled success, and at the beginning of another year which we hope will be still more successful, THE TRIBUNE takes pleasure in congratulating P. F. Ryan & Co. on the popularity, prosperity, and enterprise of their firm.

IMPORTED SADDLES.

S. Taylor & Co., 181 Madison street, have just received direct from Walsall, England, a large and fine assortment of race, gents' riding, and ladies' saddles, together with a large variety of riding bridles, bits, steel spurs, etc., to which the pubic attention is invited.

BLANEY, WILLIAMS & CO.

have the finest assortment of carriages to be found in the city, including landeaus, coupes, Victorias, T carts, and a line of end-spring and side-spring buggies of their own manufacture.

IN A BEAUTIFUL BOX.

Jno. Kranz, the manufacturing confectioner, 78 and 80 State street, is selling a full pound box of his famous mixed candies for 25 cents that no one need be ashamed of making a present of.

The traveler who loves the good things of this earth has long known the St. Nicholas, of Cincinnati, as the very gem of European hotels. He will rejoice in the enlargement—seventy-five rooms and an elevator being added.

BUSINESS CHANCES.

A SUBSTANTIAL INVESTMENT—I am the inventor and have just obtained patents protecting a variety of novel and useful articles of furniture, all constructed on one simple principle of extension. They embrace double and single office desks, sideboards, cabinets, show and sample cases, bookcases, wall paper, newspaper, and picture display racks, toilet and jewel boxes, railroad ticket cases, etc., etc. My object in coming to Chicago is to engage with some responsible, practical parties who will furnish the money or facilities for manufacturing all or such of my patented articles as may seem profitable after an examination. For personal reference I have leave to name Gov. A. G. Porter, of Indiana; John C. New, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; D. S. Alexander, Fifth Auditor Bank of Commerce, Indianapolis. By generous permission granted I refer to A. H. Andrews & Co. and C. C. Holton, wholesale furniture manufacturers of Chicago, as to commercial value of my inventions.

Space has been kindly tendered me in offices of Furniture Manf. Exchange, 1o8 Dearborn-st., where I will exhibit models and drawings during the ensuing week between 9 and 12 a. m., to those who mean business.
ALFRED F. POTTS.

A PARTNER WANTED WITH FROM $2,500 to $5,000 in a business yielding immense profits and easily handled; all transactions are upon a strictly cash basis, and balances can be made daily and capital protected beyond the possibility of loss; a judicious management in the execution of my plans will, without the slightest vestige of uncertainty, realize a large amount of money in an easy and pleasant manner. Full details of my proposition will be submitted at interview only. Address Q 66, Tribune.

AN OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE BIG money quickly is offered in one-fourth, or possibly one-third interest, in an enterprise which will yield $100,000 within a year; a similar speculation, with less advantages, last year netted more than that; full investigation courted; only parties with $5,000 to $10,000 ready cash need apply; no anonymous communications noticed. BUSINESS PERSONALS.

PERSONAL—COMPLEXIONS OF SURpassing loveliness produced scientifically and naturally! The paint, powder, and "whitewash" vender seriously alarmed! What art can accomplish. A thorough knowledge of the art of painting can transform a piece of canvas into a splendid picture of great value and delightful to contemplate. So "art" can "paint" the living face of a society belle, but how different the result. It not only ruins the delicate skin, destroying the complexion entirely, but always excites ridicule and derision. There is no wit in covering up or hiding facial blemishes with powders and paints, but it is a scientific triumph to accomplish the permanent removal of all complexional discolorations, making the skin smooth, pure, clear, fair, and of velvet softness and purity. Dupree's "Oil of Beauty" does this and even more. Ask any of the hundreds of refined society ladies who are calling constantly to see and test it free of charge! It is not a catch-penny experiment, but is destined to replace the trashy, poisonous cosmetics with which the ladies have been so swindled and deceived. The proprietors of Dupree's Oil of Beauty for the complexion invite the ladies of the whole Northwest in all fairness to call and try this delightful scientific preparation. It costs them nothing. Seeing is believing. There can be no humbug in a free test. Let them bring husband, father, brother, family physician, or any one honestly interested in their welfare to investigate with them and see if they, too, will not decide that Dupree's "Oil of Beauty" is a boon to womankind. Reception parlors, with lady attendants, open daily from 9 a. m. till 7 p. m. at 167 Clark-st., between Madison and Monroe, Room 21. Ladies at a distance send stamp for descriptive circulars. Address E. B. DUPREE & CO., 167 Clark-st., Chicago, Ill.

PERSONAL—THERE IS NOTHING SO clears and whitens the skin as my Skin Bleacher. Nature cannot surpass it. To remove wrinkles appears to many an absurd claim. A moment's reasoning shall show it to be easier than many other accomplishments. Stimulating the skin's sensibility is all that is needed. My Skin Bleacher in removing discolorations does this. Price $2. I am bleaching out the skin of over two thousand ladies in Chicago today. Anybody dissatisfied after following my instructions I will be glad to see always. My hair color is marvelous. I instruct in its use; also color any shade. It is permanent and harmless; $1.50. My Tiger Lily is sold by all druggists also; 25 cents. My make-up outfit $1. Call Monday and Tuesday at 71 Randolph-st. Then see Wednesday's papers where I move. DE LA BANTA.

LOCAL POLITICS.

The Twelfth Ward Republicans—Purification of the Primaries—An Essay on the Subject by Mr. C. H. Ham—A Reform Movement to Keep Incompetents Out of Office.

The Republicans of the Twelfth Ward to the number of about 100 met at Owsley's Hall last evening to consider the question of how best to reform the primary elections. Judge Palley was called upon to preside.

The first order of business was the reading of a paper by Charles H. Ham, which had been prepared for the occasion. It was an exhaustive, logical document, starting out with a dissertation upon our form of government, and dwelling upon the duty of the people in the matter of exercising the right of franchise and protecting the ballot-box. Following up this line of thought, the question of taxation was touched, and the speaker held that since the population of the country was centering in the cities and towns, that it was there that our system of government was to be tested—where it came in contact with a mass of men of barbaric instincts, who believed in the law of force, and who were devoid of moral principle, an illustration of which was found in John Morrissey, of New York. It was the demoralizing and corrupting influence of this class upon practical politics, he thought, which was most dangerous to our institutions. In conclusion the speaker said:

Political-party organizations are unknown to the letter of our Constitution; but it is through party that all the officers of the Government are chosen and the laws made and administered. It is of the first importance, therefore, to inquire how party affairs are conducted. For if they are conducted with a sole view to the conservation of the public interest no injury can result to the Government. But if party methods are vicious they will inevitably react disastrously upon methods of administration. In a word, as the average of party action cannot be expected to be higher than the average intelligence and virtue of the elements inspiring it, so the administration of the Government by a party will be good if its methods are good, but vicious if its methods are vicious. And here we touch directly the subject of the primary meeting. It is

THE FIRST STEP IN PARTY ACTION.

It is to the National Convention what the old-fashioned town meeting was to the ultimate political function of the citizen. Its influence reaches to the Executive Mansion. In this view, and it is a strictly just view, it is the palladium of our liberties.

Exactly what do we do at the party primary? (1) We select the man who is to receive the party support and represent the party, as well as the ward, in the City Council, who is to have a voice in the raising and expending of some millions of public money. (2) We select men who, in convention, are charged with the duty of choosing fit representatives to receive the party suffrage for the various State offices, legislative and executive. (3) We select men to act for us in the choice of candidates for the party suffrage for Congress. (4) We appoint agents to act for us in the matter of the choice of a Presidential candidate, and to decide all the important questions of party policy.

As surely as the purity of the stream depends upon the cleanliness of its source, so surely does the character of all party action, from the nomination of a candidate for the Common Council to the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency, depend upon the character of the primary.

It is plain, then, that he who regards the party primary as contemptible and looks with scorn upon participants in its deliberations, as dabblers in the dirty waters of politics, totally misconceives it, and fails utterly to comprehend its potential influence upon the course of public administration.

The party primary is the first step in administration, and it is virtually the foundation-stone of the political edifice, for the Constitution is not self-executory. It may be misconstrued; its spirit may be nullified by laws; bad laws may be enacted; good laws may remain unexecuted as a dead letter on the statute-book; criminals may go unwhipped of justice by reason of the delinquency of those appointed to try, convict, and punish them. Thus laxity of administration, or corrupt administration, or both, may gradually undermine and finally destroy a system of government as wise, just, and perfect as human ingenuity and virtue can devise. And how is this first step taken—this step whose echoes are heard in the City Council Chamber, in the State Capitol, in the halls of Congress, and in the Executive Mansion? We know what solemnity characterized the old-fashioned New England town-meeting, where the foundations of the Republic were laid. It was a dignified, orderly gathering, pervaded by a keen sense of justice and a deep sense of responsibility. By calm deliberation it sought to ascertain the will of the majority, and by its acts as calmly recorded that will. These facts are evidenced by the last great work of the fathers—the Constitution. How is the party primary conducted? It is the extreme opposite of the ideal town meeting. It is composed of an angry, boisterous crowd. It is characterized by hot disputes and bitter wrangles which not infrequently terminate in personal encounters. The lie is freely given, and fraud is freely charged. The contending factions are for the moment uncompromising enemies, suspicious and distrustful, and too ready to resort to artifices of the most disreputable character to gain their ends. The polling booth is threatened by the savage, barbaric element. It is there to vote fraudulently, to repeat, to elbow respectable citizens out of the "line," to insult timid men, to provoke quarrels, to fight, to "snatch" the ballot-box and destroy the records of the meeting. It is there to lie, to cheat, to swear falsely; it is there for sale to either faction; it is there to be revenged on society. It is the complement of the populace of old Rome, which demanded "bread and circuses."

BUT THE OCCUPATION OF THESE SAVAGES would be gone if there were no party truncheon flourishers to employ them. They would not blast the primary with their unwholesome presence if they were not hired to poison the very source of practical politics. How much better are these party leaders, small and great—leaders of factions—who use these savages for base personal purposes, than Caligula, who made his horse a consul, or than Nero, who "fiddled" while Rome was burning? They are the despots of the Turkish proverb come again to plague mankind, to cheat civilization of its fruits, and rob this later age of its garnered heritage of equal rights.

There is, however, a responsibility back of the noisy, ambitious party leader. It rests upon the respectable, solid citizen who neglects the first and most important duty of citizenship. It is as true of the ethics of politics as of theology that "the wages of sin is death." As well may the honest citizen expect thorns will grow grapes and thistles produce figs as that the party primary in his absence will lead to honest administration. But his attendance will cure the evil. There is a tremendous moral force in the mere presence of a band of devoted citizens actuated by the single purpose of promoting the public good. One unobtrusive citizen may be rudely hustled about by a gang of ruffians; but a large mass of resolute men gives them pause. This fact has been demonstrated in every emergency. When reputable citizens appear in large force at the party primary and demand their rights the disreputables slink away to their dens. In this presence there is no market for their wares. The party leaders who would, if unwatched, purchase them and pollute the caucus with their foul contract are restrained by a sense of shame and the common instinct of prudence. There is peace, order, and decorum at the polls, and an honest verdict is registered. Here we have the key to the situation, a hint of the true methods of reform.

(1) Let the political subdivisions for primary meeting purposes, as well as for election purposes, be reduced to the smallest practicable limit, in order that only a neighborhood in the old sense of the term shall be included, whose citizens will be known personally to one another.

(2) Let all citizens who value our institutions solely for the general benefit they confer, and who desire to preserve and transmit them to their posterity unimpaired, assemble about the polls of the primary or party caucus, forming for their protection a guard of honor.

I need only add in conclusion that when the party primary shall have been purified, rendered orderly and decent, made a caucus whose purpose is the selection of the best representative men for nomination to office, the inducements to the commission of frauds at the election to follow will have been reduced to the minimum. For when bad men are no longer thrust upon the party the insolent domination of bad men at the polls will cease. A pure primary means a pure, fair, free election, and the highest attainable type of administration under free institutions.

Col. Whitney complimented the paper, and called for the reading of the resolution under which the meeting had been called, whereupon Maj. Brockway moved the appointment of a committee of five to formulate a substitute for the present primary system, to be submitted at a subsequent meeting. In connection with his motion he submitted some suggestions in writing, which he said had been handed him, a thorough registration for the primary elections, and the holding of ward conventions to send delegates to the city and county conventions.

WHICH FAVORED PRECINCT PRIMARIES,

Col. Whitney was in favor of having three places in the ward to vote at the primaries instead of one in each precinct, which he thought would be sufficient, and he approved of the registration idea. What he wanted was to prevent illegal votes being cast, and he was ready to indorse anything that would tend to bring such a desirable result about.

The Rev. Dr. Peake said he was heartily in sympathy with the objects of the meeting, and went on to argue that what the cities were the country would become. There was no doubt about the existence of corruption in high places which could be traced back to the primary system; but, after all, the public morality had much to do with it. He had known a gentleman to come to Chicago, for instance, to invest his money, but after taking a walk through State street he abandoned the idea, for he had met seeming prosperity, but it was not backed by morality. Immorality certainly tended to disintegration, and what was wanted more than anything else, bearing on the proposed reform, was integrity in voting. He was a Stalwart in the sense of keeping the ballot-box pure, and if the Republicans did not protect our votes another party would spring up which would, and he would cast his with it. [Applause.] The success of the party rested on morals more than upon principles, and he would be glad to put his shoulder to the wheel to keep it in the place it belonged.

Mr. Barlow was pleased with what had been said, and, as an evidence of his earnestness in the direction of "reform," introduced a resolution discountenancing the hiring of carriages and ticket-peddlers for election purposes, but it was declared out of order.

Mr. Ball was in favor of registration for the primaries, and also voting by precincts.

Mr. Elliott did not think the primaries, as ordinarily conducted, near as bad as had been represented, but if any change was to be made he was in favor

OF THE PRECINCT PLAN.

Mr. Wilson was in favor of precinct primaries, the registration of voters, and also the securing of signatures of all voters. If this latter idea was carried out, it would meet the objections many persons held against attending the primaries, and a larger vote would be polled. They could send their vote by mail, and its genuineness would be tested by a comparison of signatures.

Some further discussion followed, in which Messrs. Brockway and Campbell disagreed, and became somewhat personal, and finally the motion to refer the matter to a special committee prevailed.

The Chair named as the committee Messrs. Brockway, Whitney, Kohlsaat, Case, and Elliott, and they were requested to report at an adjourned meeting to be held at the same place a week hence.

A CALL FOR PHOTOGRAPHS.

A Warning to Young Men Who Advertise Merely for Amusement.

For the convenience of its advertisers THE TRIBUNE has a system of lettering and numbering whereby they can receive their letters at this office and thus avoid a rush of people to their residences or offices to answer their advertisements. Like all privileges, this one is occasionally abused by triflers who wish to have amusement at the expense of others, and when any such abuse is brought to the notice of THE TRIBUNE it is promptly written up as a warning to others. Young men and women in search of situations which will enable them to earn an honest living are sometimes led into traps or embarrassed by these people, who use the advertising columns for their own amusement, and it is for the benefit of these ignorant parties also that these exposures are made.

Last Sunday there appeared in the columns of THE TRIBUNE the follow advertisment:

WANTED—IN AN INSURANCE OFFICE—A young lady copyist; state age and experience. Address K 37, Tribune office.

A NUMBER OF YOUNG LADIES

accepted it in good faith, and wrote to "K 37," applying for the position, stating their qualifications, etc. One of the applicants received a note, a duplicate of which was probably sent to all the young ladies who answered the advertisement. It read as follows:

"Miss ——'s application for position as copyist is noted with favor. If she is willing to send photograph of herself at once the writer can pass judgment more intelligently, and return same if unsuccessful. This is necessary before an engagement, and should be received on or before Saturday. K 37, Tribune office."

The young lady who received this curiously worded note very properly returned it to K 37, with

THE FOLLOWING "INDORSEMENT":

"If the fool who penned this note to me will call at the Rogue's Gallery on Vulgarity street (where I suppose he is well acquainted), he may probably find a photograph of one more congenial to him, both mentally and morally, and therefore worthy of one who manifests such slight claims to the first principles of manhood.

"MISS ——."

It was learned that the advertisement was inserted by an insurance agent named Thomas Goodman, doing business at Room 6, No. 170 La Salle street. A number of young ladies answered the advertisement in good faith, and several foolish ones inclosed their photographs for Mr. Goodman. The notes accompanying these photographs were written by young ladies whose statements showed plainly that they were desirous of securing a situation and that they viewed the matter in a more serious light than did the advertiser. It is not plain what Mr. Goodman could tell of the ability of a copyist by her photograph, and it looks very much as though he merely desired to get a collection of photographs. The columns of this paper are not for the use of such people, and that is the reason why his conduct is exposed.

MR. GOODMAN'S STATEMENT.

A reporter called at Mr. Goodman's office yesterday to see what he had to say for himself, but he was not in, and one of the two young ladies in the office volunteered the information that he would not be in until tomorrow morning. Last evening the reporter called on him at his residence, No. 524 West Lake street, and found him. He is a tall, good-looking young man, about 25 years of age, and wears a slight black mustache. When the reporter asked him if he was "K 37," he was inclined to be indignant, and wanted to know whose business it was, but he soon cooled down and said:

"Yes, I put in the advertisement you refer to. I want to change my office help, and I advertised for both a young lady and young gentleman. I have decided now to employ a young gentleman."

"What was your object in requesting photographs of applicants?" asked the reporter.

"Well, I thoughtlessly wrote those notes, not supposing that I should receive any photographs, but thinking that possibly I might secure a nice-looking lady for the position who would be agreeable company for me in the office."

"What was your objection to having them call on you in person?"

"I have two young ladies in the office now to whom I have given warning, and I did not care to have them hear what was going on, that's all. I meant nothing wrong by the advertisement, I can assure you."

Doubtless Mr. Goodman did not mean anything wrong, but he certainly did trifle with a number of young ladies who answered his advertisement in good faith. Many of them considered his request for a photograph an insult, and felt that they had been deceived and insulted.

FASHIONABLE EVENT.

Fashionable Doings the Past Week—Styles in Bonnets that Will Be in Vogue This Spring and Summer.

Quite a flurry among the fashionable ladies of this city was caused the past week by the "dress hat and bonnet opening" of Mr. Jules Ballenberg, our fashionable milliner, who has shown a marked determination this spring to surpass all of his former efforts. How well he has succeeded we leave to the crowds of our society ladies who thronged his attractive salesroom on this occasion to answer. The display consisted of unique London and Parisian designs in hats and bonnets; also original designs by Mr. Ballenberg. The materials employed were conspicuous for their beauty and richness, while the new shades and colors were simply bewitching. The prevailing style of bonnet is very small and made of garnitures of laces and flowers. Most all the round hats are large, and trimmed with beautiful plumage and flowers. The popular colors will be cadet blue, Zulu and golden browns, terra cotta green, light pink, blue, and buff in contrast blendings. The materials used are gros grain and Marveline silks Crepine, Psyche, Fanatine, and velvets; also antique oriental and crystal in all the new shades.

In straw the Panama, the Manila, the Belgian, and fine Milans promise to take the lead. The opening was a brilliant success, and the number of sales simply astonishing. Ladies who have attended the most elaborate displays abroad and in New York pronounced this exhibit of Mr. Ballenberg's as superior to any they ever witnessed.

A leading Chicago society journal, speaking of the house, says: "Fashionables of this city as well as its tributaries can indeed be proud in possessing something which no other city enjoys outside of Paris—namely: a milliner, Ballenberg by name, whose taste in regard to ladies' headgear, etc., is today an undisputed authority."

THE NEW GAS COMPANY.

A TRIBUNE reporter yesterday had a talk with Mr. J. W. Brockway, one of the incorporators, in regard to the Consumers' Gas, Fuel & Light Company, whose ordinance passed the Council Friday evening. Mr. Brockway said: "We haven't got the ordinance yet, as the Mayor has not signed it. But the ordinance is an honest one, and as such I am of the opinion that the Mayor will sign it. If the ordinance becomes a law we shall attend to our business in a proper and a legitimate way. We propose to abide by it and live up to its strictest provisions. We understand what it is and know what it means. Of course at this stage of the matter we cannot disclose our plans."

"Is it true that Jim Keene is at the back of your scheme?"

"I don't know anything about that. I know that we will, when we get established, furnish a gas that will excel any now produced in Chicago, and furnish it at a price no higher than $1.75 per 1,000 feet to small consumers and $1.50 per 1,000 cubic feet to those consuming 100,000 feet or more. Of course, it may be much less, but more it cannot be. Our objective point is to serve the public well and at a reasonable price, and thereby make ourselves liked. Of our plans, however, I can say nothing, except that there is ample capital behind us ready to push us along as rapidly as desired when the proper time comes."

The Mayor was spoken to yesterday in reference to the new gas ordinance, but very little could be gotten from him. All he would say was that he regarded the ordinance as a strong one, and the impression was abroad that he would approve of it. His information was that James Keene, of New York, was among the individuals behind it, and, if the company had capital, he knew of no reason why he should interpose a veto. "The people want cheap gas," he said, "and if the company prove to be a bona-fide concern, and can satisfy me that they are able to keep their promises, I know of no reason why the ordinance should not become a law, especially since the city's interests appear to be well protected in the matter." He will, no doubt, approve the ordinance by failing to interpose any objection to it, though he would not say as much.

SMYTH'S TIME-TRAFFIC PALACE!

Miss Laura Æsthete, Miss Etta Dictionary, Miss Tina Sunflower, and Miss Lovely Lilly talk a little about Colors in Carpets and the Æsthetic Loveliness of True Art Furniture. Scene: Miss Dictionary's Cottage, West Monroe-st.

Miss LAURA—"Now, I would call John M. Smyth's Emporium a public rather than a private enterprise."
Miss TINA—"You mean the Time-Traffic Palace, on West Madison-st., I presume—Madison, near Halsted?"
Miss LAURA—"I do think Mr. Smyth's enterprise is in the interest of the public."
Miss TINA—"That's it. It's not his five-acre store floorage nor his thirty thousand Time Customers."
Miss LAURA—"No, nor the employment his factories give to a thousand hands!"
LAURA and TINA (together)—"But the production of Decorative Art in Furniture for the masses."
Miss LILLY—"My, what Lovely Carpets Mr. Smyth is showing for the spring! The Carpet Floor looks more like a great peach orchard in blossom than a business floor. It's grand!"
Miss DICTIONARY—"It's simply superb—beyond any adequate delineation! And there is such a category of styles! Such interminable and such inexhaustible variety! Such blending of chaste elegance with the sensible and serviceable—the—the—the plain as it were! Then think of the breadth, the scope, the size of the exposition! Five acres! It baffles comprehension to take in such a floorage—such a scope of Art Furniture, and Smyth's walnut sets, and Smyth's satin parlor sets, and Smyth's common-sense chamber sets, and all the most select, desirable, and most preferable brands of Carpets upon the commercial markets of the modern world! And the Kitchen and Dining-Room Furnishings in such unmitigated abundance, it almost dazzles, dazes, confuses one to be in the centre of such a maze of things—such a maze of splendor! I am not given to the use of adjectives and superlatives myself, but I will venture this much for

SMYTH'S TIME-TRAFFIC PALACE!

It is the Largest, Most Popular, Best Patronized, Best Systematized, Best Conducted, Most Elegantly Complete, and Universally Stocked and Equipped of any Institution in the Christian or Modern World, where Time Payments are a feature, or, as it were, a primary character. Commodore Kittson Purchases Little Brown Jug and Silverton for $25,000.

Auction Sale of the Bemis Stable—The Lexington Meeting—Track Talk.

Sale of Mr. Bemis' Horses.

Several weeks ago Mr. H. V. Bemis, the well-known brewer of this city, and a man who has done more to elevate and popularize trotting than any one in the West, was advised by his physicians to spend a year in Europe, and upon deciding to follow that advice he at once announced that his large stable of trotting and pacing horses were on private sale, and if not disposed of in that manner would be sold at auction at the Driving Park yesterday. Some time since Mr. Bemis sold his two young stallions, Mambrino Sotham and Mambrino Sturges, both by Mambrino Gift, to Col. Shaughnessy, of Denver, Colo., for $7,500, but up to yesterday no other sales had been made.

In consequence of the advertisements of the sale, a crowd of perhaps 200, mostly horsemen, were at the Driving Park at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, the hour at which the sale was announced to begin. Before any move in the direction of business was made, it became known that on Friday evening Commodore Kittson, the millionaire lumberman of Minnesota, had purchased the pacing wonder, Little Brown Jug, record 2:11¾, and the celebrated trotter Silverton, record 2:20¼, by Blue Bull, paying for the two $25,000. There was a general feeling of disappointment when the news became public, as these animals were the stars of the stable, and a lively competition over their purchase would have been the result if offering them at auction.

About 3 o'clock Charlie Hurlich, who officiated as auctioneer, entered the timing stand and announced that the first animal offered would be the 6-year-old chestnut gelding Ned Hunter, a full brother to the celebrated Mattie Hunter. Like his distinguished relative, Ned Hunter is a pacer, and soon after his purchase by Mr. Bemis last fall traveled a mile in 2:22. The bidding on him was slow and spiritless, somebody whose name could not be ascertained opening the ball at $1,000, from which the offers rose by fifties to $1,300, at which price there was a long halt. Hurlich used his persuasive powers in vain, when finally "Knapsack" McCarthy, driver of the Bemis stable, offered $1,350 on his own account, and secured Mattie Hunter's brother. "You will see this fellow bring as much next fall as the Jug brought last night," said "Knapsack" to the crowd as he threw a blanket over his property and ordered it led away.

There were plenty of celebrated drivers in the crowd, but none of them seemed anxious to acquire fast horseflesh. Budd Doble was kept busy shaking hands with acquaintances and answering questions regarding his intentions as to trotting Monroe Chief this summer. Peter Johnson was looking around for a stick to whittle, and finally seated himself on the sunny side of the judges' stand, where he was joined by A. W. Longley and "Billy" Armstrong, the trio "talking horse" vigorously. W. H. Crawford, who had come out to bid on Silverton, did not find anything else that suited his fancy.

Fred Douglas, record 2:24¼, was not offered at auction, Mr. W. H. Chambers, of Pittsburg, having secured him for road use at $2,500 just before the sale began. Sorrel Dan, the pacer, with a 2:14 record, was the second animal brought on the quarter-stretch for inspection and sale. His coat was glossy and his general appearance fine. After his pedigree and performances had been dilated upon by Hurlich, somebody bid $1,000. "Billy" Armstrong raised it to $2,000. Secretary Hall, of the Driving Park, said $2,500, and then the bidding was spirited until $4,000 was reached. Mr. Hall raised this $500, and the 2:14 horse was struck off to him. "I want you to say," remarked Mr. Hall to the reporter, "that this is a bona fide purchase, made on my own account, and I would have given another $500 if necessary. He's a cheap horse at $4,500."

Hardwood, a 6-year-old stallion by Blackwood Jr., and having a record of 2:34, was next offered. A handsomer horse is seldom seen, and the auctioneer announced that he could trot close to 2:20 when in condition. W. H. Crawford started the bidding at $1,000, and half a dozen would-be buyers chipped in so quickly that $4,000 was soon reached. By degrees this was raised to $5,000, at which price Hardwood became the property of Mr. W. R. Armstrong, Flint, Mich.

A carriage team and accompanying vehicle were then offered, but as no one raised a bid of $1,250, which had been made in the morning, they were sold to the gentleman who made it.

A very pretty and stylish rig, consisting of the bay gelding Frank, record 2:29, and a 6-year-old roan gelding by Bonesetter, was the last lot belonging to Mr. Bemis offered. Ex-Ald. J. H. McAvoy was evidently determined to drive this team himself during the coming summer, and they became his property for $2,550.

After the sale of the Bemis stable at the Driving Park yesterday was concluded, the chestnut gelding Patchen, record 2:18¾, was offered. The bidding was rather lively at first, and finally Dan Brennemann, of Decatur, offered $1,600 for the animal. He was raised $100 by an outsider, and there the bidding stopped. The horse was knocked down to the $1,700 man, but he could not be found, and the auctioneer was then ready to accept Brennemann's bid of $1,600. That gentleman declined to renew the offer, however, and Patchen was led back to the stables.

Shotover's Sensational Two Thousand Guineas Victory, and Its Effect on the Derby Betting.

The result of the Two Thousand Guineas run last Wednesday has made a decided change in the aspect of various English events for 3-year-olds which are soon to be decided, and especially has it had an influence on the Epson Derby, for which, previous to the Two Thousand Guineas, Mr. Rymill's bay colt Bruce and Mr. Pierre Lorillard's bay colt Gerald had alternated as first favorit, the last named animal being by Saxon, out of Girl of the Period, and bred in this country. His performances on this side of the water during the early part of last season while not particularly brilliant were of so decidedly meritorious a character that he was selected as the principal American representative in the 3-year-old English events this year, his most important engagements being in the Two Thousand Guineas and Derby. He was shipped across the ocean, and ran creditably enough in the Middle Park Plate during the Second October Meeting at Newmarket, finishing a good second to Lord Rosebery's filly Kermesse. Bruce, Mr. Rymill's colt, had a much more successful career as a 2-year-old than Gerald, winning all of the races in which he started, some half-dozen in number, and impressing all who saw him run as an animal of great resolution. These two colts, as above stated, were made the reigning favorits for the Derby almost as soon as books on that event were opened. Bruce was not engaged in the Two Thousand Guineas, but Gerald was, and the public at once plumped him for a winner, the odds against him for three weeks previous to the day of the race having been only about 6 to 1. Last Tuesday, however, it became known that the American colt had burst a blood vessel while at exercise, and the next morning the scratching of his name from the list of starters took away whatever chances those who backed him may have had of winning their money. With Gerald out of the way the betting men could see nothing in the race but Executor, the odds against him being at once reduced to four to one. Pursebearer was also strongly supported at seven to one, the third favorit being the Duke of Westminster's chestnut filly Shotover, by Hermit, out of Strayshot, by Toxopholite. The result of the race is known. Shotover won with such ease that she was at once made first favorit for the Derby, the latest odds about her being five to one—a lower price than either Gerald or Bruce were ever quoted at. But while the victory of Shotover was a surprise to the betting men, it was not by any means the only one which the race furnished, as Quicklime and Marden, who finished second and third, were hardly mentioned in the betting, and of the five horses who were quoted in the books at ten to one or better—Executor, Pursebearer, Shotover, Gerald, and Paragon—only one—the winner—secured a place. The only American horse that ran was Sachem, a nice-looking chestnut colt by War Dance, out of Sly Boots, and therefore a full brother to Sly Dance, a filly that won some sensational races in this country in 1880, and was sent to Europe by Mr. Lorillard in the fall of that year, but was unable to sustain her American reputation against English competitors. Sachem was brought prominently before the American public last June by an offer on the part of the Dwyer Brothers to match their colt Onondaga for $5,000 a side against any colt of his age owned by Mr. Pierre Lorillard in a three-quarter-mile dash. The challenge was promptly accepted, and, as Gerold was known to be a first-class one, it was supposed he would be selected as the champion of the Rancocas stable; but when the day of the race arrived Sachem, hitherto an unknown colt, was sent out to do battle against Onondaga, and, although beaten, ran the Dwyer colt to a neck in 1:15½ over the Sheepshead Bay track. He was also nominated in the Two Thousand Guineas, and was shipped to England last fall in company with Gerlad, but it was not the intention to start him in the Guineas until the disabling of Gerald left Sachem as the American stable's only hope. He failed to get a place, and probably will not be heard of in connection with the Derby betting again.

The winner, Shotover, has a somewhat interesting history. At the sale of Mr. Henry Chaplin's yearlings at Newmarket in July, 1880, the highest price obtained was 1,400 guineas, paid by the Duke of Westminster for Shotover. Her first appearance was in the Middle Park Plate last October, when she was unplaced by Kermesse, Gerald being second, and at the same meeting she was beaten in the Prendergast Stakes, the field opposing her being a very moderate one. She ran unsuccessfully once more, and these poor performances caused her to be regarded as having no possible chance for any of the 3-year-old events this spring, and almost up to the day of the race she was hardly mentioned in the betting. Her victory last Wednesday, and her running second in the One Thousand Guineas Friday shows her to be an animal of such decided merit that she will doubtless start first favorit for the Derby. She is the fourth filly to win the Two Thousand Guineas, the others being Pastile in 1832, Crucifix in 1840, and Pilgrimage in 1878.

In addition to the Derby and the Oaks, Shotover is engaged in the Coronation, Ascot Derby, All-Aged, and Triennial Stakes at Ascot early in June. the Stockbridge Cup later in the same month at Stockbridge, the Grand National Breeders' Foal Stakes at Redcar early in August, the Yorkshire Oaks at York at the end of the month, the Doncaster St. Leger and Park Hill Stakes in September, the Select Stakes at Newmarket during the second October meeting, and the All-Aged Stakes during the Houghton meeting. As a 4-year-old, Shotover is in the Rous Memorial at Ascot and the Champion at Newmarket in the autumn.

The Lexington Meeting.

The first important running meeting of the year is that at Lexington, which begins next Tuesday. The Lexington Association is the oldest in the country, and as all its stakes have filled well and a large number of horses is on the ground there is no doubt that the coming meeting will be a success, and, inasmuch as it brings together for the first time this year the crack 2 and 3 year-olds, the result of the various events will be awaited with peculiar interest by horsemen, as furnishing facts on which to base estimates of future performances and chances. The only Eastern horses engaged at Lexington are Runnymede and Hindoo, both the property of the Dwyer Brothers, and their first appearance will be in the Distillers' Stake, a mile and a quarter. As Runnymede has been a strong favorit all winter for the Kentucky Derby, to be run at the Louisville meeting, his performance in the Distillers' Stakes at Lexington will be closely watched, and, although the distance is a quarter of a mile less than in the Derby, the style in which he runs will indicate pretty plainly his true form. One of the dangerous horses in this race will be Lida Stanhope, a mare that has been running exceedingly well at New Orleans, and her victory would not surprise the knowing ones, as she has the advantage of having been thoroughly seasoned by actual races, while Runnymede and Hindoo have not faced the starter this year. On Friday the Phœnix Hotel Stakes will be run for, and Runnymede is also engaged in this. Among the good ones he will meet are Vaubon, Ben Himyar, Lizzie McWhirter, and Mistral. Another leading event at Lexington is the Citizens' Stakes, a dash of a mile and an eighth for all ages, and among the twenty nominations are Hindoo, Runnymede, Lizzie S. Hegiaz, and Pride. The Blue Ribbon, a race for 3-year-olds, over the Derby distance, will be run May 11, and Runnymede, Bengal, Mistral, Knightly King, Blenheim, Dixie, and War Flag are among the probable starters.

Track Talk.

Horace Pardo has a dozen trotters in his stable at the Driving Park.

The suckling sister to Foxhall died at the Alexander Farm, Kentucky, last week.

The stallion Robert McGregor, record 2:18, will be driven this season by W. W. Bair, and will be shipped to him at Cincinnati this week.

Mr. O. B. Dickinson, of this city, has sold to E. Mosier, Excelsior, Wis., the gray stallion Gray Cloud, by Blue Grass, record 2:23½.

Maud S. continues to take her morning exercise in New York, driven by Phillips, foreman of Mr. Vanderbilt's stables. She will not be speeded until the spring is further advanced.

Mr. C. H. McConnell, of this city, recently purchased in Syracuse, N. Y., a team of mares—a bay and a gray—both by Walkill Chief. They are said to be able to trot in 2:35 together.

The first winner of the season is Voltaire. He is at present at Cincinnati, and his driver recently beat Billy Bair out of a suit of clothes by winning a mile dash with the old horse against a green mare driven by Bair.

There was a rumor on the streets yesterday that the exceedingly old-time trotter Silversides, record 2:22, had been sold by Dr. J. H. Siddall, of Akron, O., to a Chicago man, but it was learned that Mr. Robert Crouch, of Elkton, Md., was the purchaser.

Mr. A. W. Longley is the happy owner of a week-old colt by his stallion Silver Chief, out of Lady Monroe, by Monroe Chief; second dam the dam of D. Monroe. The dam of Little Brown Jug, also owned by Mr. Longley, recently foaled a filly by a son of Tom Hal.

Received a copy of "Goodwin's Turf Guide," containing summaries of all races run in the United States from Jan. 1 to April 22. One of the new and most valuable features of this little work is the condensed description of each race, which will be useful to speculative persons, as it gives them some idea of a horse's merits at different distances, and the advantages or disadvantages he had in any particular race, all of which are important in forming an estimate of his abilities. Its cheapness, handiness, and accuracy should secure it a ready sale. It will be issued weekly and monthly.

Peter V. Johnson will have a large stable of trotters this season as usual, and unless his usual cunning fails, some of them will go pretty fast before the snow flies. He now has in his charge at the Driving Park the following: Henderson, bay stallion, 5 years, by Strathmore; no record. Abe Downing, bay stallion, 7 years, by Joe Downing, dam by Harrison; record 2:34½. A 5-year-old filly by Menelaus. Nina S., chestnut mare, by Bay Middleton, dam by Fisk's Moscow; no record. Unnamed bay mare, 6 years, by Anthony Wayne, dam by Bald Chief. Ella Earl, brown mare, record 2:25, by Almont. Lady Linn, brown mare, record 2:47¾. Billy R., bay gelding, by Clay Pilot, dam by Seeley's American Star. Betsy Baker, chestnut mare, 8 years, by Belmont, dam Alice, by Kentucky Forrest. Resolute, bay gelding, record 2:27, by Swigert. Grand Sentinel, bay stallion, record 2:29¼, by Sentinel.

A Parsee Raises the Oath Question.

London News.

Yesterday a curious incident occurred in the City of London during the hearing of a case in which a Parsee gentleman was called as a witness. He objected to be sworn either on the Old or New Testaments, and, not being a Mahometan, he could not be sworn on the Koran. He mentioned, however, that he had a sacred relic about his person as a charm, and he thought by making a declaration and holding the relic in his hand and not concealing it, the act would be binding upon his conscience. Mr. Commissioner Kerr said under the peculiar circumstances he would be justified in taking the witness' declaration, if at the same time he held the charm unconcealed in his hand, and declared that he would consider the act sufficiently binding upon him to bear true testimony in the matter at issue. He always understood, however, that a Parsee was usually sworn holding the tail of a cow, which was a sacred animal in India.

THE COURTS.

A Compromise Verdict Rendered in the Larrabee Defalcation Case.

The jury in the case of the Trustees of the Town of Lake View against C. R. Larrabee and Theron Pardee, after being out twenty hours, agreed on a verdict for $17,637.50 yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. This was a suit against the bondsmen of William R. Larrabee, the defaulting School Treasurer of Lake View, to recover about $27,000 which it was claimed Larrabee had failed to turn over. The trial lasted a week, and the case was given to the jury Friday noon, with the above result. The verdict was evidently the result of some sort of compromise between the jurors, as it was much less than the plaintiffs claimed, and far more than the defendants admitted to be due. The usual motion for a new trial was made.

It is understood that Mr. Larrabee, who is a member of the well-known firm of Larrabee & North, will assume the entire loss, as Mr. Pardee went on the bond at his request. Mr. Larrabee bears a reputation of such sterling integrity as a business-man that if it took every dollar he had to make good the deficit his credit in commercial circles would not suffer. He has the sympathy and best wishes of everybody who knows of the case.

The Affairs of the Defunct Riverside Improvement Company to Be Again Aired in the Court.

Theodore Shaw, a judgment creditor of the old Riverside Improvement Company to the amount of $41,907.32, filed a creditor's bill yesterday against the company and its stockholders to compel the payment of his judgment. He sets out that the company was organized in 1869, but failed about 1872; and that in 1874 he obtained his judgment against it. The capital stock of the company was $600,000, but only about 10 per cent of it has ever been paid, and he claims that the stockholders should be made to pay up the balance due, and that the sums thus obtained should be applied to the payment of the company's debts. About the time he received his judgment the company made a voluntary assignment of all its lands to the Chicago & Great Western Railroad Land Company, an organization ostensibly gotten up for the purposes of building warehouses and dealing in grain, but it is asserted that this corporation was a fraud and a sham, created by E. E. Childs and others for the express purpose of getting possession, without consideration, of the improvement company's property. Shaw also asserts that the subdivisions known as the Third and the Fourth Additions to Riverside are fraudulent and void, that the location of lots cannot be ascertained from them, and that Alexander Wolcott, the County Surveyor was induced to sign them and give his certificate without any examination. Shaw, therefore, asks that the title of all those who own lots in these subdivisions may be declared void; that the railroad land company may be declared to hold the land it received from the Riverside Improvement Company in trust for the latter, and that the lands may be reconveyed to the improvement company, and made liable for the payment of its debts.

A Victory for the City—A Hoosier Balked in His Little Game.

On the 19th day of November, 1878, John Hensley fell into a well in one of the public streets of Indianapolis, broke his arm, and injured his back. He brought suit against the City of Indianapolis and recovered a judgment on June 20, 1879, for $1,500, which judgment was paid in August, 1879. He came to Chicago in October, 1879, and spent a few weeks with his son-in-law, John W. Hahn, at 35 Aldine square. He then returned to Indianapolis, and on the 22d day of February, 1880, he came to Chicago, claiming to have come here to go into business. On the afternoon of Feb. 25, 1880, he claims to have come down town on foot from Aldine square, and spent the afternoon in viewing the sights of the city. He then started home and walked down Michigan avenue to Twenty-second street, and thence along Twenty-second street to Cottage Grove avenue, and then from Cottage Grove avenue to South Park avenue, and then down South Park avenue to Thirty-first street, and then he claims to have noticed for the first time that he had lost his course and turned on Thirty-first street to go to Cottage Grove avenue, and when about 100 feet east of Vernon avenue a plank was gone from the sidewalk next to a lamppost, and there he claims to have fallen and broke his arm and injured his back, causing concussion of the spine. There was a clear sky and full moon. The accident is alleged to have occurred about 7 p. m. He then got up and walked home to Aldine Square. No doctor was called until the next evening. He was up about the house the next day as usual, and one witness testified that he was down to Thirty-first street asking about the sidewalk the next day, and saying he was going to sue the city. The doctor claims to have set his arm the next day after the alleged accident. On the 16th of March following suit was brought against the city, claiming $10,000 damages. April 27 the case was called for trial before Judge Moran and a jury. The plaintiff was upon the stand and gave his evidence, in which he testified that he had broken his arm by the fall in Chicago, and had injured his back so severely that he was unable to move in bed at that time. He wore a mitten upon his hand in court, and exhibited to the jury his hand, which apparently was a useless member. The fingers afterward stiffened, and were entirely useless, and his wrist was swollen. After he had left the stand City-Attorney Grinnell received a telegram from the Superintendent of Police at Indianapolis, stating simply that Hensley had once sued that city for damages and recovered a judgment. Before the case was reached for trial a telegram had been sent by the City-Attorney of Indianapolis, asking as to Hensley's history there, and no response was received until Hensley had left the witness-stand. Hensley was then recalled, and asked in regard to the suit against the City of Indianapolis. He said that he did not sue the City of Indianapolis for any injury to his back, but only for a broken arm, and the arm then was broken high up near the elbow. The city had no proof to the contrary, and consequently the jury awarded him $2,500 damages. A record of the case against the City of Indianapolis was obtained, and also Hensley's evidence as given at Indianapolis, taken by the official stenographer of the State. From the record in that case it was shown that he did sue the city for injuries to his back, and the language then used by him in describing the injuries to his back was almost word for word that used by him on the witness-stand in the case here. It also appeared that the arm was not broken at Indianapolis at the place he swore it was, but near the wrist, where he claims it was broken at Chicago. Upon showing the facts to the Court Judge Moran granted a new trial. A warrant was then taken out for Hensley's arrest for perjury. An officer was sent to Indianapolis, and Hensley was brought here. The grand jury refused to indict for the reason that the civil suit was still pending, and that it would be giving the city an undue advantage in the case, and that the civil suit ought first to be settled. Depositions of witnesses were taken at Indianapolis to show that Hensley had not recovered from the Indianapolis injury when he came to Chicago, and that the injury then sued for and the one claimed at Chicago were one and the same. The case was again heard before Judge Hawes last week, and yesterday the jury, after being out long enough to take one ballot, brought in a verdict in favor of the city.

City-Attorney Grinnell and Assistant City-Attorney Knight appeared for the city, and Buell & Fitch for the plaintiff.

HAZZARD, THE BANK EMBEZZLER.

George Hazzard is in Chicago, but the Central Station detectives don't know it. If they did, he would be on his way to Auburn, Ind., where he is wanted for obtaining money under false pretenses, embezzlement, etc. This fellow Hazzard is one of the smartest scoundrels the West has ever produced. He first came before the public several years ago, when he was arrested for beating merchants of this city out of large quantities of goods by representing himself as worth thousands of dollars, thus getting credit, the houses, however, getting nothing. He squeezed himself out of this difficulty somehow, but was rearrested in Indiana and convicted in the United States Court at Indianapolis for swindling practices as a banker at Auburn in that State. He was President of the bank there, as well as a storekeeper, and about all its assets disappeared. After getting out of the penitentiary he was again arrested under an indictment for embezzlement found in the State court, and gave $8,000 bail, Mr. Edgar Henderson being his surety. Hazzard didn't turn up when the case was called, so judgment was entered against Henderson for the amount of the forfeited bond. To save himself from an execution Henderson traced Hazzard to this city, where he was caught March 7. While in Indianapolis awaiting transfer to Auburn he was allowed some privileges by the policeman having him in custody. Mrs. Geer, his sister, had followed him, and, while the two were out walking one evening with the officer the latter was seized by some unknown parties and tripped up, Hazzard in the meantime making his escape. Nothing was heard of him until yesterday, when a man saw him eating his dinner in the Glen House restaurant on Washington street, near Fifth avenue. Hazzard is about 38 years old, tall and slim, with a pale face and sandy hair. He is lame, and carries a cane. Now that his whereabouts are known the Auburn authorities will doubtless try to catch him. But he is always wide awake, and some sharp detective work will be required to put him where he belongs—behind the bars at Michigan City.

An Imperturbable Hen.

When the tornado that swept over the neighborhood of Cuthbert, Ga., a few days ago, struck the house of Judge Knowles, a hen was on her nest in a barrel in the back yard. Persons say that the barrel was picked up, whirled round and round, blown over the house, and dropped right side up in the front yard. After the storm Judge Knowles went out to move the barrel. To his surprise the hen was still at her post, and it was evident that some of the eggs had hatched in mid-air. When the Judge looked in, the hen flew to the rim of the barrel, eyed the departing cloud, and announced with a peculiar cluck her contempt for all boreal eccentricities.

SCIENTIFIC COOKING.

Breakfast Breads and Griddle Cakes.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Emma P. Ewing gave an intereresting lesson to a class of ladies at the Chicago Athenæum on "Breakfast Breads and Griddle Cakes." She said that baking-powder and eggs were introduced into batter-cakes, muffins, and most breakfast breads, mainly to assist in making them light and tender, but that could be done without the use of either if the materials were rightly proportioned, by simply beating the batter or dough very thoroughly in a pure atmosphere, so as to incorporate with it a sufficient quantity of fresh air. In the best Graham gems, which are made only of Graham flour, salt, and milk, this was very noticable, as the great amount of gluten in the flour caused it to retain all the air forced into it; and when Graham batter is beaten briskly a few minutes at an open door or window it becomes perfectly aerated and very light. Baking-powder and eggs, however, in most cases lessen the labor and facilitate the process of making raised bread and cakes. Taking a pint of patent flour, a teaspoon of baking-bowder, and half a teaspoonful of salt, the lecturer demonstrated how by the use of a common sieve and two sheets of paper laid on the table before her, they could be sifted and mixed together half a dozen times in about that number of seconds, and as this sifting and mixing, she said, aided very materially in aerating the flour, it was quite important where very delicate cakes, muffins, biscuit, etc., were desired. After the various siftings, the flour was put in a bowl, an ounce of butter lightly rubbed through it, and, with cold sweet milk added, it was stirred quickly to a firm, smooth paste and came clean from the sides and bottom of the bowl. Placing the mold upon the molding-board sprinkled with flour, Mrs. Ewing gave it a few turns and left it in position for rolling out, remarking as she did so that this method of mixing soda biscuit would always insure soft dough, which was very essential to the delicacy of the biscuit. For strawberry shortcake, she said, mix the dough precisely as for soda biscuit. Roll quite thin and bake on pie pans the size of the pans. When thoroughly baked separate the upper and under crust of the cake with a fork, spread the inside lightly with butter and, laying one-half on a plate, cover thickly with berries well sprinkled with sugar. Then add another half cake and another layer of berries, and so continue till the pie is three or four layers thick, finishing with fruit. The strawberry shortcake made, baked, and served as an illustration elicited general admiration. Corn muffins were made according to this recipe: Mix together a pint and a half of cornmeal, two teaspoons of sugar, one teaspoon of salt. Pour over it a quart of boiling milk. Let it stand and swell till cold, then mix with it the well-beaten yolks of four eggs, and, lastly, the whites beaten to a froth. Bake in heated gem pans. Delicious rice muffins, she said, could be made by the addition of a cup of well-boiled rice.

Doctors' Fees in Europe.

Pall Mall Gazette.

Perhaps in the matter of doctors' fees it might be as well to glance at France and Germany. In both these countries there is a regular tariff for the visits of medical practitioners, often—nay, generally—exceeded by rich patients, but affording a guarantee against excessive charge for the poorer. It is also a satisfaction to the public mind generally to know exactly what they will have to pay when calling in a doctor. Permit me further to draw attention to a point of medical etiquet in North Germany. Except in cases of severe illness, when daily attendance is absolutely necessary, a doctor never repeats a visit. He must be requested to do so. This custom has its advantages, as it will often happen in cases of slight illness that a single visit suffices. If medical fees are too high with us, they are too low in Germany and France (two marks and two francs a visit), excepting, of course, in the fashionable watering-places, whither none but rich folks betake themselves.

THE VICE-PRESIDENCY.

A Bad Office; Mischief It Has Done.

Insidious Local Politicians Riding Double with Great Men.

What Comes of Putting Little Fellows in the Vice-Presidency.

An Office Which Pays a Premium on Treachery, and Is a Perpetual Temptation to Assassination.

Special Dispatch to Cincinnati Enquirer.

NEW YORK, April 27.—Talking yesterday to an Ohio man about the present Administration and the loss of Ohio to the Republican cause, he said:

"Ohio gave the Republican party away when it committed the cowardly act of sending to the New York delegation to ask it to recommend anybody or everybody for the second place on the Republican ticket. The men who so easily dropped Sherman for Garfield were quite capable of dropping Garfield for Arthur."

He named Dennison, Butterworth, Foster, and several others as responsible for making Arthur Vice-President.

"Now," continued my friend, "what are we to expect, when the State which should have stood on principle the most thoroughly gave it away without any temptation? There is no record that New York went for Garfield any stronger because Arthur was on the ticket. On the contrary, Arthur being on the ticket lost us 20,000 votes in the interior of the State as compared with previous elections. Indiana was all torn to pieces by fueds in the Democratic party, and ready to go Republican anyhow, and Arthur had no influence there to beat the Democratic ticket. The same want of principle which made Hayes come out for Cornell in 1878 led the Hayes men to nominate Arthur in 1880. We now see the result in Ohio. Having no National issue, we fell a prey to the divisions in our ranks on the temperance question; and the whole German race has virtually gone away from us, rendering it probable that they are going to do the same for several successive elections. The same causes which operate against us in Ohio will affect Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin, and we may find the whole of the Central West going back on the Republican party at the next Presidential contest."

"But," said I, "President Arthur had nothing to do, that I can see, with the liquor interest in Ohio leaving the Republican party."

"You are mistaken," said my friend. "Had we been united in support of the National Administration our Legislature would have refrained from touching the liquor question as it has done. The Government at Washington presented nothing to talk about, and so we had to find a State issue, and we found it in the liquor business. Had the Administration been of any influence with Ohio Republicans it could have counseled them. Any suggestion coming from Washington, however, was liable to produce sullenness. Arthur will not get one vote for renomination from the State of Ohio if the convention should be held at the usual time this summer."

"Well, isn't the Vice-Presidential office a kind of nuisance, when it is given away as a mere appendage to the Presidency for the sake of carrying some one faction in some one State?"

"It is a fatal office," said the Garfield man. "Gen. Washington had appended to him the unpopular John Adams, and consequently the Federal party survived Washington only one term of that Vice-President, who meantime had become President. The second Vice-President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, turned renegade to the National party, and threw Adams out of the succession, and the Vice-President therefore governed this country twenty-eight years, having a double term himself, two terms of eight years each for his supporters, and another term for the son of old Adams, who had renegaded to Jefferson. The Federalists made Thomas Jefferson Vice-President and lost the Government, therefore, for a whole generation. The third Vice-President, in point of time, was Aaron Burr. He almost brought on a revolution by undertaking to cheat his colleague on the ticket out of the Presidency by the aid of the Federal party. The first motion ever made of using force to overawe Congress was at that contest in 1801, and the device used nearly eighty years afterward to seat Hayes in the Presidency was suggested in the case of the contest between Burr and Jefferson."

"Well, when you come to the fourth Vice-President of the United States, who spanned two Administrations, your prognostication fails."

"No, it doesn't," said the Ohio man. "George Clinton, going into the Vice-Presidency, made the ultimate great schism in the Democratic party. Although Jefferson had him selected to punish Burr for his intrigue with the Federalists, yet Clinton was of an ambitious family, content with nothing short of the Presidency, and his nephew, De Witt Clinton, undertook to defeat James Madison for a reëlection by the help of his uncle in the Government. Calhoun opposed George Clinton's going into the Vice-Presidency from his seat in the South Carolina Legislature, and afterwards claimed that this oversight brought on the great contest between the Southern and the Northern interests in the Democratic party. The fifth Vice-President, Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts, was selected to rebuke the opposition of the Federalist party in New England to the war of 1812, and also to get rid of the Carolinian influence in New York State, which continued to be hostile to the Virginia line of Presidents. Daniel D. Tompkins, having quarreled with De Witt Clinton, was next rewarded by the Virginia and Southern school with the Vice-Presidency for eight years, and they kept him well supplied with liquor so that he never could become a sufficient Presidential quantity. He was the sixth Vice-President.

"Then came Calhoun, who ultimately tore the country to fragments and killed a million men, all because Gen. Jackson turned him out of the succession to the Presidency. He ran first behind John Quincy Adams, and, seeing he could not stem the tide of Jackson's popularity, slipped in for reëlection to the second place and got nearly all the votes that were cast; and as Vice-President he went over to Clay and the Half-Breeds of that day, assisting them to antagonize the Administration; and he retired from the Vice-Presidency to ruin his country, if possible, and succeeded as far as he had the power. He sat in the Vice-Presidential chair and encouraged nullification and rebellion in South Carolina; and old Gen. Jackson threatened if hostilities broke out there to hang his Vice-President, which he ought to have done, and it would have broken up any such office, which is a perpetual temptation to assassination in this country. You nominate a man of affairs to be President, and you put behind him an insidious local politician like Calhoun, or Burr, or Arthur, for the second place;—and it is a vast temptation for the fellow behind to run over the fellow in front, on the principle of 'run little wheel, big one catch you.'"

"Well, now, continue your interesting sketches of the Vice-Presidents," I said to the Ohio man.

"The eighth Vice-President," he remarked, "was Martin Van Buren, who was not the choice of any considerable number of States or voters to be President, and he reached the office almost entirely by the help and training of Jackson, who wanted to punish Calhoun by showing him that he could make a mere puppet be the Presidential successor. Failing to be reëlected, because he had but slight original strength with the people, Vice-President Van Buren continued his pretensions, and the two-thirds rule being successfully pressed against him in 1844, after he had lost the country by a furious revulsion at a fair election, he continued to stand in the way of the Democracy, and in 1848 ran a stump ticket and beat Gen. Cass, who otherwise would have been elected. So the Democratic party had to pay the penalty for taking up a Vice-President without original qualifications and force."

"Continue," said I, "this interpretation."

"Well, the next Vice-President was Richard M. Johnson. They ran him on the idea that he had killed Tecumseh. Johnson commanded a Kentucky regiment at the battle of the Thames. He divided his regiment, and turned one-half of them against the English regulars and the other half against the Indians. That portion which charged the English was successful, while that which charged the Indians, under Johnson himself, was a dead failure; yet Tecumseh fell in the collision, and it was pretended that he had killed Tecumseh. Wounded in that action, Johnson went to Washington and took his seat in Congress, and he was elected to the Senate on the principle that afterward took in Cerro Gordo Williams—that he had licked somebody at some time, just where was not important. He was reëlected to the Senate on Tecumseh's reputation, and became Vice-President in 1836. He then began to spend money and live high, and he reached no other office except the State Legislature, which was about the extent of his capacity. Johnson's first name, by the way, was Mentor, which was also the name of Garfield's country seat and neighboring village, and it is barely possible that Mentor might have been called for Johnson. There were three great acts in Johnson's public life. He was constantly fighting in Congress to stop the mails running on Sunday; and in favor of pensions for all professional soldiers; and he had imprisonment for debt abolished in Kentucky. In 1840, when he ran for Vice-President again behind Van Buren, he was beaten easily, and Gen. Harrison went in."

"Now, you will come to John Tyler, of course?"

"Yes. There is no necessity of dwelling on his story except to say that, like Arthur, he was put behind Harrison because he represented nothing that Harrison did represent. Harrison had some well-known views and affiliations. Tyler had been opposed to Harrison's views; yet, being also opposed to Van Buren, the Harrisburg Convention rushed to put him on the ticket, and he completely destroyed the effect of one of the grandest revolutions that ever happened at the polls. He went back on everything that the Whigs designed. He opposed the United States Bank, was lukewarm on protection, and had yet the conceit and impertinence to expect that he could be elected President on his own hook—which the Democratic party humored till near the close of his term, when they swept the floor up with him, and the miserable cipher lived along to the time of the Rebellion, when he went into it, having in the meantime become an abject creature of Calhoun, who was the master spirit of Tyler's Administration. They nominated Tyler to conciliate some elements opposed to Van Buren, and he sold out everything there was in Harrisonism."

"Well, what have you to say against George M. Dallas?"

"That was a respectable nomination," remarked my friend; "yet Dallas was a trimmer of the class of James A. Bayard, the grandfather of Tom Bayard. He was an aristocratic Philadelphia officeholder, who became a Secretary of Legation when quite a boy, and a satellite of Albert Gallatin and the District Attorney and Mayor of Philadelphia, where he took office under the United States Bank; and, bolting away from Gen. Jackson on the bank question, the Whigs took him up. When Polk was nominated for President it was necessary to have a Bank man at the other end of the ticket to take the wind out of the sails of Henry Clay, who was then running for President. As Vice-President he cast the determining vote for the tariff of 1846, devised by Robert J. Walker, a free-trade or revenue tariff. Dallas had been put on the ticket to save the tariff, but had voted against it with the Presidential maggot in his mind. The tariff measure assisted to beat the Democratic party at the ensuing election, and Millard Fillmore easily got the Vice-Presidency, and, by the death of Gen. Taylor, the Presidency."

"That reminds me," said I to my friend, "that I interviewed George M. Dallas in 1861 on his recall from the English Mission by Mr. Lincoln's election. Buchanan, who had also been a protective-tariff man, sent Dallas to London, and when he came back I went to his house on Walnut street to ask him if he was in favor of the Union or against it. He gave such a diplomatic answer that I was not quite sure how he stood, but reported that he would allow the Union to go on in a general contingency. He had a very white head of hair, and a most delightful complexion, indicating that he drank but little whisky, and preferred his wine red."

"Well," said my friend, "Dallas, anyhow, was a renegade to the sentiment which had elected him to sustain the tariff, and the first free-trade tariff we ever had was passed by his defection. Then Millard Fillmore was a complete disappointment to the Whig party, which took him up with the understanding that he had anti-slavery views, and meant to turn the course of the country toward free soil and free labor. Gen. Taylor dying in about a year, Fillmore began to cater to the South, and the compromise measures were passed in his term, which hastened rather than delayed the Civil War. Gen. Taylor had appointed a Cabinet of Seward men, and Fillmore turned them all out and put in old Mr. Crittenden, whose last act was to stand up in Congress and handicap Kentucky, Missouri, and Virginia into a policy of neutrality, whereby they were all three overrun. Fillmore never amounted to anything after he left the Presidency, though he was picked up by the Know-Nothings and managed to carry one State, Maryland, which behaved during the War very much like his character—first murdering the Union troops as they went through Baltimore and then refusing to enlist in Lee's army when he invaded the State; so that Maryland disappointed both sections, but was a good Fillmore State all the same."

"Well, now," said I, "what have you to say about the thirteenth Vice-President, William R. King, of Alabama?"

"Mr. King was 67 years old when he became Vice-President," said the Ohio man. "He had been in Congress forty-three years before he took the Vice-Presidency. He spent very much of his life in the diplomatic service, by which he was withdrawn from the country. He was rich, never aggressive, seemed to have no original ideas, and posed largely on his style and manners. You read all the eulogies of his decease, and you will find that he was praised for nothing except his deportment and length of service. Mr. Chandler, of Pennsylvania, said of him in the obituary speech, that he was an unobtrusive, retiring gentleman; that no appearance, no act of his could be regarded as challenging attention, and that he never made any demands on anybody. Hence he was elected Vice-President as late as 1852, and died before he could fill the place. The next Alabama man to be heard of was William L. Yancey, who seemed to spring to the surface by King's disappearance; and then came the Nashville Convention, which was the conception of secession, and Alabama plunged into disunion second in time only to South Carolina."

"I anticipate," said I, "what you are going to say about John C. Breckinridge."

"Well, he was put behind Mr. Buchanan as a guarantee to the South that the North would have no principles on the only important question of that day—slavery—and would be a check on Buchanan if he should happen to think for himself and with his Northern neighbors. Breckinridge played for the Presidency as long as he dared, and then sold out to the Rebellion, and was an active traitor in almost every department of the Rebellion, from the Cabinet to the field. Poor Buchanan was perpetually afraid that he would be assassinated by the ultra Southerners in order to bring Breckinridge into power, and for that reason Buchanan never interposed the least obstacle to the Rebellion till the Southern element had gone out of Washington. The presence of Breckinridge, his Vice-President and his constitutional successor in case he should be killed, paralyzed the old public functionary."

"The fifteenth Vice-President," said I, "was Mr. Hamlin."

"Yes. He was an old chronic office-seeker, who jumped out of the Democratic party when he found the Republican party was going to carry Maine. He was a harmless Vice-President, because he never had any policy except getting offices for his henchmen, cousins, and cronies. A few clerkships, messengerships, doorkeepers' places, and police positions around Washington satisfied him thoroughly, and, therefore, he was an honest Vice-President, never lifting his eyes to the Presidential honor. They drew him out and put in Johnson, who, by the fatality attending the Vice-Presidency, got Lincoln's seat, and was run by his poor White House prejudices on one side and by the whisky ring on the other till he lost support first on one side and then on the other. Those who admired his policy could not stand his associates and morals, and those who liked his company had no principles. His family had paid the penalty dearly. His son was a poor drunkard; his son-in-law died a drunkard's death; other scandals attended his retirement, and finally his low habits disgraced his own return to private life and involved him in a tragedy. The very men who rushed to put him into the Vice-Presidency had the most reason to repent it."

"I hope," said I, "you are not going to say anything against our Schuyler Colfax?"

"Nothing," said the gentleman.

"How about Henry Wilson?"

"He was a wise, weak man, considerable of a preacher, very little of a practicer, and of no consequence at all in the Vice-Presidency. He could not prevent the degradation of his colleague, Charles Sumner, and, while sometimes against Grant and sometimes for him, that chieftain merely smiled at Wilson, and if he had become President by Grant's decease, I fear that Grant's Administration would have looked respectable by contrast."

"What do you think of Mr. Wheeler?"

"He had it in his power to give Hayes some support in New York that might make them triumph; but he wanted to come to the Senate, or had some hopes of the Presidency, and between the two he testified to the usual inconsequentiality of the Vice-President, and has never been heard of in office since. The man whom his Administration had turned out of office for making the customhouse a place of corruption next received the Vice-Presidency, and is now our President; and hence you will find that the tail is wagging the dog, while Ohio is breaking away from the party; and as the Whigs lost the Government under Vice-President Tyler and Vice-President Fillmore, they are pretty sure to lose it, it seems to me, under Vice-President Arthur."

THE IRISH LAND QUESTION

The Strike Against Tithes—A Parallel.

London Pall Mall Gazette, April 7.

Much will be gained by Mr. Gladstone's speech on Tuesday afternoon if it fixes in the public mind the all-important fact "that the Government of the country has had since the foundation of the Land League to deal with a state of things in Ireland entirely different from any that had been known there for fifty years." Even if we go back for fifty years, says the Prime Minister, what you find is only a miniature of the operations that have been going on for the last three or four years. "The resistance to tithe, which completely defeated the Government of that day, with all its means, and the Parliament of that day, was, after all, but a miniature of the resistance to rent which has been the basis of the present movement." This is only what readers of this journal have had preached to them any day for the last eighteen months—namely: that we are face to face with a social revolution infinitly more dangerous than that which in the time of our fathers "completely defeated" the British Government, all the resources of civilization notwithstanding. In the last week of 1880 we told the story of the tithe war, and it is worth while for the sake of the moral to tell it again now, because, according to the high authority of Mr. Gladstone himself, we see in it the miniature of the formidable problem that baffles and perplexes us all today:

The Protestant clergy were supported, as everybody knows, by means of a tithe levied on the squalid and impoverished farmers who then swarmed over the land far more abundantly than today. To this tithe the clergy were entitled by every form of law. But to the people who felt the hardship of the burden in their own lives and persons it became yearly and daily more intolerable. They resented the impost with all the bitterness that can be felt by men under oppression, and they made the collection of it a work not only of difficulty but of great peril. At length, after the Government had looked on for several years of growing exasperation, the strife rose to a hight. All over the island there arose a general conspiracy to pay no more tithe. Lancers, dragoons, and police came to assist the proctors, and the tithe was carried off at the point of the bayonet. The law was utterly paralyzed. The unfortunate clergy were deprived of the income which the law had guaranteed to them, and were condemned to endure the deepest distress. The Government advanced some £60,000 for their immediate relief, and undertook to collect the unpaid tithes. The attempt was a signal failure. The arrears for one year were £104,000, and of that sum, after fierce conflicts and much bloodshed, the Government recovered £12,000 at a cost of £15,000. It was with difficulty that the ordinary legal process of distraint was executed; and when in obedience to the law the cattle or crops of the defaulter were put up to auction, no one dared to buy them. No one would even give the cattle food. They were driven to the nearest port and thence sent to England; the taint of tithe, we are told, even followed them to England, and many persons still refused to buy them. Murder and crimes of violence were rampant. It is reckoned that there were nearly two hundred cases of homicide in the single year 1832, arising from the disturbances connected with the tithe. To give evidence in an agrarian case was equivalent to a sentence of death. The abduction and violation of women were common features of daily life. The anarchy was so complete and so horrible that the only parallel that men could find to it was the sack of a captured town. The disorders, which were a thousand times more atrocious than those of today, went on for ten times as long before the Government took them seriously in hand. Actually on the very eve of the great Coercion bill of 1833 a Parliamentary committee reported that the existing laws were adequate for the restoration of order. The Government, however, did not think so; and, considering the awful state of Ireland at that moment, we cannot wonder at their decision. They brought in proposals which in stringency recalled the memorable Six Acts of Castlereagh and Sidmouth.

Let us now look what was the effect of this "Spanking bill," as Palmerston called it. It was this: In Connaught there was a slight decrease of what were called insurrectionary crimes, but an increase of general crimes. In Leinster there was a decrease under both heads, but in Munster there was under both heads actually an increase. Many months after the "Spanking bill" had become a Spanking act, it was just as possible as before for the Lord Lieutenant officially to inform the Minister in London that the illegal combination surpassed the law in vigor, promptitude, and efficacy, and that is was more safe to violate the law than to obey it. The words read as if they were written yesterday. In some counties the landlords were obliged to promise to reduce their rents. Nobody dared to work for a landlord who would not comply with the Whiteboy orders. With many limitations, the Coercion act was renewed in the following year. Outrages still remained frequent; and, what is more to our immediate point, throughout the greater part of the country it was futile to try to enforce the payment of tithes, and the attempt was constantly followed by bloodshed. At one time it was calculated that, in spite of military and police, there was due a million and a quarter pounds of tithes which the Government could not collect. It was the same in 1835 as in 1834. The peasantry were still urged not to desist from seeking the abolition of tithes "by all legal and constitutional means of redress." What these now familiar words meant, as the annalist tells us, was that the process-server was a hunted animal, and that when sales of distrained cattle were attempted nobody who valued his life dared to buy. Calm observers told the public, when coercion was in full swing, exactly as we are told now, that many parts of the country were only tranquil because there was no need for disturbance. Whiteboyism reigned triumphant—after two years of coercion. The country was tranquil, but travelers compared it to the tranquility of a barrel of gunpowder. "If any person imagines," says Sir G. Cornewall Lewis, "that the Whiteboy code is abrogated, whenever outrages are not daily committed, let him ask the Tipperary or Limerick landlord to what extent he is a free agent in the letting of his land, and what would be the probable duration of the life of a tenant who violated the Whiteboy rules."

Why do we tell this story now? Because we are again face to face with the same stubborn and unconquerable difficulties.

RING RULE IN THE TOWN OF LAKE.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

LAKE, April 26.—One of the most complete instances of ring rule may be found in the Town of Lake. There a well-organized and widely-known official ring has constantly preyed on the taxpaying interests until its political and financial powers are so strong as to defy the most energetic opposition to their reëlecting themselves times without number. One of the first matters demanding the early attention of the town board after every spring election is the "fixing" of the two local town papers—one at Englewood, the other at the Stock-Yards. This is easily done by a liberal and regular subsidy under the claim of publishing the "official" proceedings and the street assessment notices; thus are at once secured the constant laudation by those sheets of every official act, and at the end of the term the officers are declared capable and honest, and worthy of reëlection. The new board also makes a complete surrender to the larger corporations of the town, this being done through the medium of nominal assessments on personal property—a few thousand dollars valuation, which should be assessed a million. These corporations in return vote all their employés in the interests of the ring, a majority of the voters of the town being embraced in this class. The more prominent and "influencial" workers are rewarded for their services by being awarded some of the fat contracts—and there are very many of them—and with being made Superintendents of Roads and Bridges. The entire Police Department, from the Police Magistrate down to the turnkey at the station, is organized solely in the interests of the ring. In an aggregate of over 5,000 cases docketed by the police during the past three years, the fines have aggregated over $20,000, but the Justice only accounts for $1,400, of which nearly $1,000 is embraced in his last annual report. The police are used to spy out and report all persons who say aught against the honesty and ability of any member of the ring, and all such offending taxpayers are made the constant recipients of all manner of derogatory remarks and epithets, and if they have any friends in the public service of the town there is an immediate vacancy.

The Town Treasurer received $487,000 of town money during the past year, on which he was allowed 2 per cent, making $9,740. In addition to this he was allowed $600 for services as Supervisor and Chief of Police, making $10,350 for one year, with his salary of over $1,000 as Trustee to be added. The Governor of Illinois gets but $6,000 a year. The Town Assessor was allowed $1,000 for making the general assessment, and had two assistants. The books were not in his hands over seventy days, which would allow him at the rate of $14 per day; the law allows $2.50. The Town Clerk was allowed $1,500 by the board, but the Treasurer's report shows $3,077 drawn from the Town Clerk fund, the Clerk also receiving a large sum for various fees, of which he makes no account. The Treasurer's report also shows the Board of Trustees were allowed, up to March 15, 1882, $3,038, and at the final meeting on March 31 an additional $1,987, making in all $5,025 for Trustee salaries for one year, or over $1,000 for each member. There were not to exceed fifty-two board meetings during the year, for which the town charter allows $3 per day for actual attendance. The report also shows for "legal expenses and commission," $6,286, and at the final meeting $964 more was allowed—a total of $7,250 for the year.

It is a matter of record (A. B. Condit, chancery case No. 59, Judge Barnum's calendar) that one member of the present board received illegal pay to the amount of over $3,000. Notwithstanding this sworn testimony, this same official is constantly being held up by the local papers of the town as the very zenith of ability and honesty.

Further evidence of the reckless manner in which the ringsters have handled the public money may be found in the last annual report of the Town Treasurer, hereto attached, although it is very apparent that the taxpayer was not intended to know the true nature of all the financial transactions, as the amounts are generally aggregated, and no specifications are given. And it is absolutely impossible for even an expert to analyze the report to any satisfactory extent.

The report shows that the bills paid by the board during the year amounted to $456,451 up to March 15, and at the final meeting $22,045, making a total of $478,497. The appropriation for the year was $179,796, making an excess of $298,701 above the appropriation made by the board to meet all expenses of the town for the year. Comment is entirely unnecessary!

The following comparison may prove of interest: The entire city expenses of the City of Peoria, including all salaries and police expenses, amounted to $30,358 for last year, with a population of 29,396. The expenses of Hyde Park, including all salaries and police expenses were $32,975 for last year, with a population of about 20,000. The expenses of the Town of Lake, including all salaries and police department, were $55,100, with a population of 18,315. Peoria, with a population nearly 50 per cent larger than Lake, pays but little more than half for one year's expenses.

THE RING THEATRE FIRE.

Trial of Officials for Neglect in Connection Therewith.

New York Herald.

VIENNA, April, 24.—The trial of Julius von Newald, ex-Mayor of Vienna; Herr Jauner, formerly Director of the Imperial Opera-House; three of his officials, the Police Inspector Landsteiner, an engineer and a foreman of the Vienna Fire Brigade, who are accused of neglect or of punishable actions in connection with the burning of the Ring Theatre, began today. The Public Prosecutor read the indictment against the accused. Besides the persons mentioned above two minor employés of the burned theatre are on trial.

The accusation against the Mayor, which caused him to resign his post, is chiefly this: When the theatre at Nice was burned through an explosion of gas the magistrates of Vienna consulted upon the measures to be taken to prevent a similar catastrophe there, and nineteen preventive measures were proposed, voted and communicated to the Mayor, who was to have them enforced. Among these measures an increase was ordered in the number of the properly drilled firemen and a regulation that the oil lamps should be kept lighted in the passages and on the stairs, and so forth. The rules were sent to all the managers in Vienna, but the Mayor did not see them enforced, and, it seems, even declared that he was incompetent to do so. Director Jauner knew of the rules, but left them to his people, and, it appears, did not see whether they were carried out or not. The indictment, which is composed in a fluent style, begins by stating that when some terrible catastrophe has befallen a part of the country and a part of the population the first feeling of the survivors is one of pity for the sufferers; the next, however, is the earnest desire to prevent similar misfortunes for the future; and when the calamity has been occasioned by crime or neglect to see the law applied in its severest form to those who can be proved to have been guilty. The catastrophe is so unprecedented a case of utter neglect, cowardice, and heedlessness on the part of all the authorities concerned that it should also become the subject of profound investigation, and no one should be spared, whatever may be his position. The Mayor and the Director take up but a small part of the indictment, the former because he neglected to enforce the rules, and had nothing to do with the fire itself; the latter, because—it is alleged—he drove home as soon as he saw the flames burst out of the casements, and was not seen near the place again. He is the person who from his experience must have known how full the theatre was likely to be on a fête day. According to the indictment his one exclamation was, "I am ruined!" and then he drove home.

The preliminary examination elucidated the causes of the fire. The lights over the scene were lighted by electricity, and for this purpose a box was drawn up which contained gas-pipes guarded by a wire trellis-work, and by means of which the lighting of the long rows of lights was effected. On the evening in question a number of openings in the horizontal pipe did not burn when the electric spark touched them, and the man busy with the lighting endeavored to ascertain what was the matter without turning the gas off before doing so. A large quantity of gas escaped in the box hung up for lighting purposes, and soon the flames burned through the wire trellis and set fire to a thin muslin background rolled up and ready for use. There were at least twelve such backgrounds, and these caught fire almost immediately. The firemen (they were not drilled men from the brigade, but a sort of amateur firemen) were none of them near, and the workmen, never giving a thought to the audience, thought only of the best means of escaping. There was no one there to take the command in the hour of danger, and every one looked to his own safety first. It was then they unhappily hit upon the idea that the best means of escaping was by an opening, closed by a shutter, at the bottom of a descent without steps, used for bringing horses upon the stage, and which opened directly into the street. The moment this shutter was drawn up a terrible current of air blew in and drove the flames toward the large curtain, which, as every one who witnessed the fire asserts, was rent in two. Had that unlucky shutter been left closed, the fire would have spread to the audience slowly, and many, if not all, could have escaped. The next terrible neglect was that of the Inspector of the Police, who not only, it is said, did not take a single step to ascertain if the theatre were empty, but even disregarded the persons who came from the interior and said that hundreds were still in every part of the house.

It has been declared over and over again that even had an attempt been made to save the victims, it would have been too late, as they must have all been dead before 7 o'clock. But this assertion has been proved false. A lady, who lay in a swoon on the staircase, awoke suddenly and escaped at a quarter-past 7; and a gentlemen, whom some of the water sent into the burning house by the fire-brigade restored to consciousness, saved himself at twenty minutes past 7. Probably the greater part of the persons on the stairs were only in a swoon, and could have been saved had the necessary steps been taken. According to the indictment the director was the most cowardly, and the inspector the most unfeeling of the persons implicated. The engineer and foreman of the fire-brigade are accused of having insufficent materials from the central establishment of the fire-brigade, which is situated at two minutes' drive from the theatre. All this neglect would have mattered little in itself were it not the police custom in Vienna never to lend an ear to the complaints of the public, which in this case spoke plainly and entreatingly in a hundred instances, but were even stopped by force. The proceedings will show how many persons whose relatives were in the burning house implored the police to search for them, and how they were refused not only help, but even admittance. The words spoken by the police to reassure the Archduke Albrecht, who appeared on the scene, "All are saved," have become a byword in Vienna, and are used as a means of characterizing the mode in which things are done in Austria. "Never were more truthful words spoken," concludes the indictment. "We should say instead, 'Except those persons who, during the catastrophe of the 8th of December, 1881, were lucky enough to save themselves, no one was saved by the aid of either our local police or the fire brigade.'" The Imperial Councilor therefore feels himself fully justified in appearing as plaintiff. Two hundred and twenty-six witnesses are to be called.

All He Wanted Was Common Civility.

Down at Cape Cod last summer Chauncey M. Depew heard of a rough skipper on a whaling voyage who, when obstinate, could see nothing. The mate shouted out one day, "Thar she blows and thar she breeches"; and the Captain says, "I don't see no blows and I don't see no breeches." Pretty soon the mate yells out, "Thar she blows and thar she breeches"; the Captain said, "I don't see no blows and I don't see no breeches." Again the mate yells out, "Thar she blows and thar she breeches"; the Captain said, "Mate, if you think thar she blows and thar she breeches, you can take the boat and go for her." The mate took the boat and brought alongside a whale which tried out eighty barrels of oil, and the Captain said:

"Mate, you have done well, and shall be mentioned to the owner; you will be complimented, perhaps rewarded."

And the mate said:

"Capt. Jones, I don't want no mention, and I don't want no compliment, and I don't want no reward; all I want is common civility, and that of the d—dest, commonest kind."

SEALING.

The Newfoundland Seal-Fishery for 1882 a Failure.

New York Herald.

ST. JOHNS, N. F., April 15.—The year 1882 will long be remembered in the history of the Newfoundland seal-fishery. The tempestuous character of the season, the unprecedented quantity of heavy Arctic ice on the eastern coast, and the intensity of the frost all combine to make it the most trying on both ships and crews of which there is any record either in the history or traditions of this great ocean fishery. The word failure sums up the net result of the spring's operations. Only two ships outside of the Gulf of St. Lawrence fleet have made "paying trips." These are the Arctic, Capt. Adams, who scores 25,000 old and young harp seals, and the Thetis, Capt. Dawe, who comes next and puts together 11,000 young and old harps. The balance of the steamers will not make an average of more than 5,000 young seals. Last year three ships—the Resolute, Esquimaux, and Narwhal—landed a larger number of seals than the combined squadron this year that operated on the northeastern whelping grounds.

Some 300,000 to 350,000 young seals have this year eluded the wary vigilance of their pursuers, but, although a present serious loss, by a principle of compensation these will come in the course of three years as "breeders," and thus largely increase the capital parent-stock. It would, however, appear that no such exceptional contribution was needed. The whelping grounds of the seal on the northeast coast of Newfoundland have been yearly visited by 10,000 sealers, yet the fishery has so far shown no indications of diminution or depletion. This has been going on for nearly a century, yet the breeding stock has not been sensibly diminished. The five years from 1881 back to 1877 have yielded a larger general average each year—namely, 407,000 old and young seals—than any other five years that can be bracketed together in the history of the Newfoundland seal fishery.

Since the application of steam to this sealing industry, now twenty years back, it has never happened that the fleet could not get out to sea at the proper and seasonable time. This year proved a notable exception. Sailing vessels may proceed on the voyage after the 1st of March, but steamers are restrained by statutory regulation from leaving port prior to the 10th of March. The object of this provision is to prevent the destruction of immature seals. The parent seals rise to the ice about the 1st of March for whelping purposes, and the young brood are not ripe for the sealer's knife before the 17th to the 20th of the same month. The 10th of March came this year and also the 10th of April, but still found the whole Conception Bay fleet, comprising four large steamships and fifteen sailing vessels, still held firmly in the ice pack, which a continuance of fierce northeasters had driven into the bay. Not till yesterday did the fleet escape from their icy bondage; but the harvest season is over, and it is now too late to retrieve the serious losses of the early spring. This section of the sealing fleet is manned by some 2,250 men, and the outfitting of the ships and crews cost a shade over $100,000. They will, however, pursue the "old seals" down to the 20th of May—a game which in nine cases out of ten is scarcely ever worth the candle. The unwonted heaviness and ruggedness of the ice this season has been the means of inflicting serious damage on the hulls and machinery of our fleet. Most of the steamers have their bows and stern and rudder posts damaged, while nearly all have had two and even three propellers broken into pieces. Were it not that the fleet use detached and hoisting propellers they would all be hors de combat among the ice-fields before they were ten days out. Notwithstanding the exceptional rigor of the weather, the storms, the snow-drifts, and the fierce frost of the spring, there were only two deaths to be recorded out of the whole fleet, whose combined crews number over 5,000 men. These were deaths by drowning.

A SECRET TELEPHONE.

Sending Conversations Over the Wires in Sections.

New York Times, April 28.

The articles of incorporation of the National Secret Telephone Company were filed in Albany yesterday. The capital is $5,000,000, divided into 50,000 shares of $100 each, and the privilege is reserved to increase it to $10,000,000. The incorporators are Prof. J. Harris Rogers, Dr. J. W. Rogers, Gen. Charles Ewing, and Gen. Thomas Ewing, of New York, and Frank Hume, L. G. Hine, and E. C. Dean, of Washington, D. C. The company, which has not yet been fully organized, was incorporated to manufacture and put in operation a telephone invented by Prof. J. Harris Rogers, of Washington. The telephone is called the "secret telephone," because when two persons are talking no one else, although he may be on the same line, can listen to the conversation. Instead of using a straight line a circuit is formed, so that the two extreme ends of the wire meet. The ends of the wire where cut at a box or station, after leaving the electrodes, come in contact with a commutator, which is in the shape of a revolving wheel turned by electricity. The wheel is divided into four opposit segments, two of which are of metal and two of a non-conducting material, such as glass. In this manner, when one end of the wire is in contact with the conductor, the other is in contact with the non-conductor. The wheel divides the conversation phonetically, and sends the sounds alternately first in one direction on the circuit and then in the other. Thus there may be a dozen boxes on the line, but from the ones not in direct communication only half of the conversation can be caught, and then it would be simply unintelligible noise. The alphabet, it is said, cannot be spoken in the telephone so that it can be understood on one-half of the circuit alone, and the wheel, it is claimed, secures secrecy. The secret telephone is about one-half the size of the Bell telephone. A carbon diaphragm is used in the transmitter, instead of a metal one, as in the ordinary telephone, and in the receiver a common horseshoe magnet is used instead of the vibrating armature. The inventor claims great advantages for his instrument over the ordinary telephone. Instead of being suspended, the electrodes float in mercury, which gives distinctness in sound and enables the telephone to be operated at long distances. There are many other minor differences between the "secret" and the common telephone, but the advantages urged are the secrecy and the superiority in transmission. In an experiment in Washington conversation in a low tone at a distance of twenty-five feet from the transmitter was heard plainly two and one-half miles away. The promoters say that the company will be organized in thirty days, and that it will be ready to put up lines in sixty day. They propose to construct a line from New York to Albany and thence to Buffalo, but will establish plants in all the principal cities the same as the other telephone companies.

HUMOR.

A reason given why a piano was not saved at a fire was because none of the firemen could play on it.

Mr. Dorsey says he has done nothing that he is ashamed of. We did not think he was nearly so bad as that.—Boston Transcript.

A fish with eight jaws has been caught at Santa Monica, Cal. The scientists called in pronounce it a variety of what is known as the mother-in-law fish.

There is a girl in Plymouth County who has had eighteen different lovers, and not one of them ever got his arm around her. She weighs 384 pounds.—Boston Post.

The land agent worked for four hours trying to induce a man to emigrate to Dakota by telling him how healthy it was out there, before he found the man was a professional gravedigger.

Jesse James was a very liberal man, and has received many blessings for the charity he extended to those who needed help. He stole the money he gave away; but, when necessary, and sometimes for fun, did not hesitate to murder innocent people. He had many noble traits of character.—New Orleans Picayune.

"There is no use of talking," said a New Haven woman. "Every time I move I vow I'll never move again; but such neighbors as I get with! Seems though they grow worse and worse." "Indeed," replied a friend. "Perhaps you take the worst neighbor with you when you move." An oppressive atmosphere prevails in that vicinity.—New Haven Register.

In one of the corridors of the alleged Palace of Justice an old advocate sees a young and alleged learned brother at a distance walking alone, gesticulating nervously and talking to himself. "That man must be as crazy as a loon—a lunatic, I should say," he remarked to a companion. "Why so?" "Can't you understand? Sir, a lawyer who talks to himself is as bad as a confectioner that eats his own candy."—Paris paper.

A man entered a street-car with a half-consumed cigar in his hand and sat down beside a grim-visaged virgin considerably past the period of her youthful bloom. After a time the cigar went out, and the incense arising from the cooling stump made the ancient spinster's nose heave like a Sandy Hook buoy. She called the conductor to her and said sharply: "I thought smoking was prohibited here." "So it is, madame." "It is, eh? Look at this loafer." "I can't help it, madame; his cigar isn't lighted." "Well, then," she shouted, "for heaven's sake make him light it." Women are not always perfectly logical.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Dr. Lamson.

M. D. Conway writes from London to the Cincinnati Commercial:

"There is a curious circumstance connected with the Lamson case which has not been mentioned in the papers. A year or two ago the Medical Association detected Lamson in an ingenious fraud of some kind. As nearly as I can learn, he forged some medical diplomas for persons on the continent. At any rate, it was a fraud which did not exactly bring him under British laws. The Medical Association, instead of exposing him, merely took some quiet action among themselves, which resulted in depriving him of position as a physician. He thus lost practice and sank into poverty. But the public were not put on their guard; had they been, Lamson's victim might still be alive."

TYAGASTUS SKEERS.

A NEW-ENGLAND BALLAD.

For The Chicago Tribune.

We've been a fixin' up the church,
An' paintin' out an' in, sir.
Our parson's got a bran-new perch,
That's slicker than a pin, sir.

I b'lieve in prayin' ez we go,
An' doin' things up brown, sir.
We made the pulpit kind o' low;
The old one tumbled down, sir.

'Twas one of those old-style affairs
Fixed up in high position,
Flanked by two windin' flights o' stairs,
And covered with a quishion.

Old Elder Tyagastus Skeers
To that exalted station
Went up those stairs for fifty years,
And preached "predestination."

He harped upon eternal wo,
The Bible-cover slappin',
Just like a man upon a frow,
To keep the folks from nappin'.

We lis'ned in our boyhood years,
With res'less feet, to hear him;
We watched the wasps buzz round his ears,
An' cobwebs hangin' near him.

But changes come, an' time will glide,
Like rivers to the ocean,
Or boulders down the mountain-side,
When once they get in motion.

The'r goal the good old deacons gained,
And stopped at Life's last station;
But Tyagastus he remained
To preach "predestination."

The folks all larned by heart his theme—
Each phrase familiar sounded;
They used to go to sleep an' dream,
Tho' hard he hit an' pounded.

They needed sumpthin' more benign
To meet the'r moral hunger.
They met an' told him to resign—
They wanted some one younger.

"Resign!" cried Tyagastus Skeers—
"Resign! My! what a notion!
There aint a preacher that appears
Ez young ez I in Goshen."

"Ef all will lis'n Sunday morn,
I'll make a last endeavor
To show that I can blow my horn
Ez long an' loud ez ever."

Nex Sabbath-day the church was crammed—
'Twant big enough to hold us;
About the torments o' the damned
Old Tyagastus told us.

"Wo! wo!" he cried; "despair! despair!
Shell come to all creation."
He slapped his hand, and sawed the air,
And roared "predestination!"

A sudden crash, a cloud o' dust,
The rotten pulpit crumbled;
Down in the pew o' Widder Rust,
Ez foreordained, he tumbled.

The widder caught him in her arms
Ez headlong he descended,
An', smitten by her buxom charms,
The'r lives were lately blended.

On life-insurance now is heard
His voice in soft persuasion;
He never preached another word
Upon "predestination."

Liver, Kidney, and Bright's Disease.

A medicine that destroys the germ or cause of Bright's disease, diabetes, kidney and liver complaints, and has power to root them out of the system, is above all price. Such a medicine is Hop Bitters, and positive proof of this can be found by one trial, or by asking your neighbors who have been cured by it.

His daughter, Miss Flora, was united in marriage to Mr. Walter Dodson, a young gentleman connected with the well-known firm of Murry, Nelson & Co. The young and interesting couple were well-wished by quite a large company of their friends, and were substantially remembered by a large number of costly and beautiful presents.

The marriage of Mr. Frank Seifreid and Miss Josephine E. McGowan was celebrated at 12 m. on the 29th inst. at the residence of the bride, No. 54 Pierce street, the Rev. Dr. Thomas officiating. After the ceremony an elegant dinner was served to the large company of friends, and the happy couple left on the 3:20 express for Battle Creek, Mich., on a short visit to the bride's parents, after which they will go to their future home in Georgetown, Colo. The bridal presents were numerous and appropriate.

A very pleasant wedding occurred Thursday evening at St. Mark's Church, corner of Cottage Grove avenue and Prospect place. The bride was Miss Clara D. Hunter, daughter of James W. Hunter, Esq., and the bridegroom Dr. Charles R. Bassett, a well-known young physician on the South Side. The ceremony was performed in the English style, the Rev. Mr. Fleetwood, rector of St. Mark's, officiating. The bride was dressed in white silk, with lace overdress, and the bridesmaids, Miss Sophronia Howard and Miss Minnie Nixon, also wore white, the one with pink the other with blue trimmings. The church was filled with invited friends. Immediately after the ceremony the happy pair left for the West for a two-weeks' trip and a visit to the bridegroom's relatives. The reception will occur May 16, on and after which date Dr. and Mrs. Bassett will be "at home" at No. 16 Aldine square.

Mr. Alvin H. Sanders and Miss Lizzie A. Hildebrand were married Tuesday evening, the 25th inst., at the residence of the bride's parents, No. 995½ West Monroe street. They will be at home to their friends after May 8 at No. 778 West Monroe street.

William Robert Ebell, salesman for Macullar, Parker & Co., of Boston, and formerly of St. Petersburg, Russia, will soon marry Miss Josephine Weerts, daughter of Mr. Weerts, of La Salle, Ill., connected with the La Salle Zinc Works and residing at La Salle, Ill. They will live in Englewood.

The members of the People's Church—Dr. Thomas, pastor—were entertained Friday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. A. V. Hartwell, No. 504 Congress street, the occasion being the regular semi-monthly sociable of the church.

Jumbo gray is the latest shade of that color.

It is considered in bad style to wear the crinolet or bustle close up to the waist; it must be fastened some inches below it to be in fashionable position.

Jersey bodices of cut blue, mauve color, rose, cream, or pale gray are worn with white satin skirts trimmed with tinted lace, the tint corresponding with the color of the jersey.

Brown Scotch tweed is an exceedingly fashionable material for traveling dresses this year. The new brown is a shade between the tints of copper and bronze, and is very handsome in effect.

Eglantine pink, lemon-colored, and pale-blue cashmere tea dresses, profusely trimmed with cream white lace and silk embroidery, are the prettiest dresses for the warm season which have yet appeared.

A stylish carriage dress is made of dark green satin with a short visite of the same lined with gray silk and closed with silver buttons. The Buckingham tunic opens over a round underskirt trimmed with satin plaitings, and is caught midway on the front of the skirt with a large bow of satin ribbon with floating ends. The Vandyke hat of dark green satin braid is trimmed with moss-green feather-tips and a cluster of blush-roses.

The wide Tyrolese and Gainsborough hats rival the London Witch and Queen Mab bonnets in general favor, while the close little cap bonnets beloved by Frenchwomen are smaller, flatter, and more fashionable than ever. Among a number of pretty French bonnets is a Gypsy shape made of Tuscan lace of an unusually yellow hue. Outside is a wreath of scarlet honeysucles and a bunch of perfumed Isabella roses. The lace crown is covered with amber beads, and the strings are of yellow net worked with beads and caught together by a bit of scarlet honeysuckle.

The most fashionable styles in walking costumes are those which show a perfectly plain skirt formed of some rich material, gored in French fashion, thus giving it the cachet seen upon no other skirt. Around the bottom is placed a full "rampant" outstanding ruche, which constitutes the only trimming. Above this is worn a short polonaise with full short poufs at the side, or a pointed bodice and tunic with panniers. To be worn with these are handsome jackets or visites to correspond. Later on, shoulder capes—Incroyable, Vandyke, Mother Hubbard, Quaker, and Carrack—will take the place of these wraps. Pelerines of every description are to be more in vogue than ever the coming season.

Various shades of gray will be much worn the coming season. Steel gray will be adopted by elderly ladies, while softer hues, showing a sheen of pearl or silver, will be used for youthful wearers. A very handsome dress, designed for a stately matron in this city, is made of "winter sky" silk, with Louis XIV. bodice of the same, and panniers of rich black lace. Over the shoulders is draped a large bertha of the same lace. A second dress is of the most delicate shade of silver-gray satin, with a triple-plated ruche around the foot of the skirt. The sharply-peaked bodice is trimmed with pearl-beaded point applique lace. The sleeves are very tight to the arm, and over these are to be drawn a very long pair of silver-gray dressed kid gloves, which are to reach to just above the elbow.

Fashion is running wild over embroideries of every kind, and this trimming is used with a lavish hand upon toilets designed for every occasion. Morning dresses of pale-colored surah, veiling, vigogne, and summer cashmere show exquisit designs in Venetian openwork; Grecian patterns in superb oriental coloring blended with gold or silver threads, and floral designs with blossom and foliage of Nature's own counterpart in size and hue. Whole dresses of net are completely covered with embroidery, to be worn over princesse slips of tinted surah. A "Vallerie" costume exhibited up-town has an underskirt of amber satin with an overdress of amber net, embroidered with golden wheat-heads, wood-mosses, and bouquets of shaded poppies. The overdress is looped back with amber clasps and edged with a fall of amber chenille fringe, flecked with shining beads of ruby, green, and amber.

Cashmere trimmed with moire, satin, or velvet will be much worn for demi-toilet, and even for evening dress, as the new spring importations show very novel and attractive shades of color in these fabrics. These goods will be in great vogue, especially in the rich artistic shades of olive, golden brown, royal blue, and dark laurel green. The most expensive of these are finished on one side with a handsome bordering wrought in Persian, Egyptian, or Pompadour designs in bright contrasting colors. For home wear in these patterns are shown those of a soft doe color with a Persian bordering in black, Indian red, and green, with faint dashes of gold. These bordered dresses are made up most effectively into tea gowns fashioned à la Watteau. "Oriental" cashmere, or Indiana cloth, a fine woolen fabric of purely British manufacture, is also a very popular variety of cashmere goods, which is often made up in conjunction with Algerian plaided or striped surah. An imported model made of these fabrics has a short round skirt of dark-blue "Oriental" cashmere with shell-plaited flounces shirred at the top, making a double heading to each. Above this is a tunic of Algerian striped surah, which is laid in full plaits underneath the sharp-pointed bodice. In the back, the tunic is of the self-colored material, as is also the bodice, which is open up the front, lacing over a chemiset of the Algerian striped surah. The sleeves are laced up the back to correspond.

For a short summary of the fashions we chronicle first that the "Worth" visite takes the lead in the long list of new spring wraps, and that short dresses are to be preëminently the style for even full-dress occasions, a recent large opening of imported toilets showing not a single trained dress, although many of the costumes were made of the richest brocade, satin, and velvet. Economical ladies about to invest in a new "best" suit are advised to purchase a black grosgrain silk of the best quality, which is cheaper in the end than a pattern from the "bargain" counter at half price, and to trim it with black lace and jet-beaded passementeries, jet having lost none of its prestige in Paris. So a lady on this side the water is safe for a year to come at least. A "Worth" visite of the silk, trimmed with lace and passementerie to match, and a black straw or lace bonnet, trimmed with jets or a spray of some bright French flowers, with strings of watered ribbon, will constitute an elegant, durable, and always appropriate costume to wear throughout the year "for best." Formerly a sash and a young girl were as closely connected in our ideas as a teething baby and an india-rubber ring. The former conjunction we are now taught by la mode to dissociate in a measure; for pointed waists and broad sashes are increasingly worn by women of every age and size. Medium-length basque bodices seem to be going out of fashion, for if not extremely long the basque, so called, hardly deserves the name, being pointed in front and very much cut up over the hips. All bead trimming is exceedingly fashionable, and pearl embroidery especially so. At one time real or imitation pearls were considered wholly unsuitable for day wear, but things have changed in this respect, and now strings of pearls are worn around the throat at any hour. A lady driving in the park recently had a dainty princess bonnet, entirely covered with large cream-white pearls, there being no other trimming but a cluster of white chenille hyacinths on one side.

The Gentlemanly Cetywayo.

Manchester (Eng.) Examiner.

After a brief stay in this room, Mr. Samuelson, the interpreter, came to tell us the King was ready to see us. I have purposely as yet left out the King's name, as I have been thinking how best to spell it. It is generally spelled Cetywayo, sometimes Ketschwayo, but neither of these is at all like it is pronounced. "Tschtwyo" is the nearest I can get to it. The first syllable is formed by striking the tongue against the upper teeth, exactly like an English expression of impatience when you have done anything wrong or are scolding any one (Tut, tut). We went in through the front door of the house, into a sort of entrance-hall, the door and ceiling of which were polished. The only decoration was a portrait of the Queen. Cetywayo—I think I had better adopt the conventional way of spelling the name—was seated in a large armchair. He wore a coat of blue serge, and had a black velvet smoking cap trimmed with gold on his august head. We all shook hands with him and then seated ourselves on the chairs that had been placed in a row in front of him. He is a huge, powerful-looking strongly built man. His head seems a little too small in proportion to his body; perhaps it is from being set on a pair of such broad shoulders. There is a sort of a kingly look about him, and he preserved his dignity of manners throughout the interview. He is, Mr. Samuelson, the interpreter, thinks, about 44 or 45 years of age. He is very dark in color, not far removed from black. He has a short, straight nose, not dumpy or flat, and his lips, though thick are not so thick as are usually found on negroes. He has a beard on his chin and a slight moustache. His eyes have an unquiet look, and we all noticed a tired, depressed air about him.

We had a long conversation with him, and, although he did not evince much, if any, interest in it, he answered all our questions, and asked his readily enough. When asked how he liked the prospect of going to England, he said he should be very glad to go, and then he should see the Queen and her officers, and ask them to let him go back to Zululand. He expected to see many wonders in England. He had already seen more wonders than the heart of a black man could conceive. His ideas of England are, of course, rather vague, and, as he cannot count further, I think, than 100, Mr. Samuelson, to convey to him an idea of the size of London, told him that one town had in it about twice the number of people there were in South Africa. Upon hearing this he whistled in quite a European fashion two or three times. Mr. T. was introduced as an engineer—as one who makes engines. Cetywayo asked him how he first thought of them in his heart. Mr. T. tried to explain to him the origin of steam engines, adverting to the story of the tea kettle and the doings of Watt. Then we passed on to another room, where we saw some of the royal household, the female attendants of the King, who were brought with him from Zululand. They were all sitting down sewing when we went in, and had spread out before them rush spoons, bead necklaces, etc., which they offered for sale at the uniform price of three shillings, and they would only take it in shillings. One of them, the last but one in the list, stood up. She is very tall, being over 6 feet, and had her hair dressed in a very curious manner, standing straight up, somehow, on the top of her head. The last on the list is a young girl of 16 or 17 years. She is not bad looking, and when smiling looked very pleasant. B. was quite smitten with her, and she seemed much pleased with his attentions. When we came out again Cetywayo thanked us for having bought the things he saw we were taking away with us, and he talked to me about my leg (it was in splints, having recently been fractured). He asked me if I had taken some medicine that would go down to my leg and cure it. He said that there once was a man in Zululand whose leg was cured by a missionary doctor in that way.

WHITE ELEPHANTS.

Barnum Negotiating for One with the King of Siam.

Dispatch to New York World.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., April 25.—When Mr. Barnum was shown the statement published in the World of today that he had begun negotiations to procure one of the sacred white elephants from the King of Siam, and had already sent to his Majesty some presents, with a request for the loan of one of the sacred animals, he threw up his hands and said:

"Well, how did that get out? I didn't intend that it should become known for several months yet. But now that it is out I might as well make a clean breast of it. It's all true, every word of it, just as the World has it. I'll tell you all about it. You see, Siam has never allowed one of its white elephants (which are really albinos) to leave the country, because they believe that at some time the spirit of Buddah will appear in one of those animals, and if they were to sell or give any one of them away they might dispose of the spirit of their god. France and England have been trying for forty years to get one, but without any success. I have had my eye on Siam for years, but never knew exactly how to get hold of the thing until about two years ago, when Mr. Sickles, nephew of Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, was Consul to Siam. I knew him very well, and got himself and Mrs. Sickles interested in my project to obtain one of the sacred animals, if only for a short time, in order that I might exhibit him.

"The King of Siam, whose name, by the way, is Somdetch Phra Paramindr Maha Chulalongkorn, is a very intelligent young man, and speaks and writes English fluently. Mr. Sickles spoke to the King one day about allowing America to see one of the elephants. The King likes America as much as he detests England, and he said he should like to extend the courtesy to us but he didn't believe his people would consent as yet. He said he wasn't very superstitious any more himself, but the people were, and he was afraid we would have to wait here in America until the Siamese became more liberal in their views. After Mr. Sickles returned, and I began thinking the matter over, I determined to make overtures to the King in a quiet way. This I have been and am doing. I secured permission from the State Department to send presents and things to the King—that is what ever I could send legitimately through the regular consular mail—and about a fortnight ago sent a large number of handsome and curious presents which would be sure to please the King. I don't care to enumerate the articles. The World has correctly given some of them. Suffice it to say that they were much more valuable than any mere elephant, white or black, could be. The State Department was willing to accommodate me because the King of Siam had offered our Government about a month ago a number of black elephants for breeding purposes, the King being ignorant of the fact that this climate is not good for elephant breeding, and that there is only one man here who understands the subject anyhow, and that is my man." Here Mr. Barnum rubbed his hands enthusiastically.

"Besides sending the King presents," continued the showman, "I asked him for the loan of one or more of his white elephants for any length of time and for any price he might stipulate. Then to tickle his Majesty and compliment the country, I sent him a photograph of my twenty-two elephants. Since then I have sent him pictures of Jumbo and the Baby. You see, elephants are everything in Siam, and the photographs will interest the King greatly. I shall keep on sending him presents until I can get an answer, which will not be under four months I suppose. I am rather sorry the story has leaked out, but then I guess there's no one can get ahead of me and secure one of the precious monsters before I do."

"Yes," said Mr. Barnum, as he arose to bid the World correspondent good-by, "it is the ambition of my life to exhibit a white elephant. I know I ought to be satisfied with my present fame, for, as Lord Rosebery, the famous member of the English Parliament, wrote me recently, my name is immortalized on both sides of the ocean, and even the English children learn of me almost as soon as they learn their alfabet; but I am not yet content, nor will I be until I have given bonds to Siam's King that I will return in safety the first white elephant which ever left Siam."

FAVORIT PERFUMES.

Secrets of the Laboratory Where Almost Any Scent Can Be Imitated.

New York Sun.

Ten years ago foreign perfumery practically monopolized the market here, but lately American manufacturers of perfumery have entered into such lively competition with foreign makers that they not only rival them in the quality of their goods, and in certain specialties even excel them, but have popularized the use of perfumes by very great reduction in their cost. Perfumes proper, leaving out of the question colognes and waters, are divided into two classes—the bouquet and the plain extracts. It may surprise many persons and destroy some of their cherished hallucinations to know that very few of the perfumes supposed to be made directly from the flowers, the names of which they bear, ever had anything to do with those particular flowers, but are compounded from very different sources. By a process known as enfleurage, which is the exposure of beef fat to fresh flowers in close boxes until it is thoroughly permeated and charged with their odors, the perfumes of six flowers are obtained which could in no other manner known to science be preserved apart from the fresh petals. Those flowers are violet, jasmin, tuberose, rose, orange flower, and cassie (cinnamon flower). From those six there are fifty or more combinations made for the simulation of the odors of other flowers. Sweet pea is made with jasmin and orange flower; hyacinth is counterfeited by jasmin and tuberose; lily of the valley by violet and tuberose. But the resources of the perfumer are by no means confined to the pomades, as the scented fats are termed. He uses many essential oils, the principal of which are sandalwood, bergamot, lemon, rosemary, neroli (made from bitter orange flowers), patchouli, and attar of roses. It is very difficult to get the last named in a pure state, because its great cost tempts to dishonest adulteration. Very often rose-geranium oil is substituted for it. Musk is another important ingredient, entering as it does into almost all perfumes except those which are actually imitations of flower odors, or, as styled by perfumers, "natural"—as, for instance, heliotrope, tuberose, white rose, and violet.

There is fashion in perfumes, as in everything else with which woman has to do, but in them the changes are less marked than in many things, for there is a conservative adherence among the most refined persons to fidelity to particular perfumes. In Europe it is the custom more than it yet is here that a woman adopts one perfume and never uses any other. Naturally that puts some limit to fashion's fitful moods, but there are, nevertheless, millions of persons who like variety in their odors as much as in their food, and are always more or less ready for any new thing. Among these just at present there is manifest a strong tendency to natural perfume, such as the delightful Maréchal Neil rose, the heliotrope, jasmin, and violet. In this connection it may be noted that it is by no means necessary that a flower shall be odoriferous for the sweet-smell vender to put its perfume on the market. There was, for instance, the night-blooming cereus, which has no smell; but Phalon some years ago made a perfume by that name, and it is still a popular one. And it is not requisit either that, even if the flower has an odor, the perfume christened after it shall smell like it. There is the stephanotis, by way of illustration, introduced here by a famous London house, which made both fame and fortune by that perfume. It was delightful, but it had not the slightest resemblance to the odor of the flower, which is charming. But an American manufacturer contracted for a daily supply of fresh stephanotis flowers, which are rare in this country, to be sent to him in New York from South Framingham, Mass., and, with nature thus before him for comparison, he devoted a whole season to experiment in the compounding of this perfume, attaining success.

Of the old-time perfumes, avowedly bouquet extracts, which hold popular favor, may be mentioned Frangipanni (an ancient Italian compound), Mille Fleurs, West End, Jockey Club, Essence of Bouquet, Bridal Bouquet, Spring Flowers, and Upper Ten. The new ones of deserved popularity appear to be, from the representations of their sales by retail venders, Maréchal Neil, Edenia, Fascination, and Tally-Ho. Violet, always very popular, is by no means, as might readily be supposed, a plain perfume, drawn from its own flowers, but a compound of odors or bouquet extract. Were it made from the pomade as jasmin is, it would not last at all, it is so delicate. That mention, by the way, suggests what is really the great test of the perfumer's art—the preservation of the delicacy of natural odors, and at the same time making them lasting. To affect this another class of materials known as fixateurs, enter into the perfumer's laboratory. Gum benzoin, storax, civet, balsam of tolu, and ambergris are included under this head. Common, cheap perfumes do not contain ambergris—it is too expensive, costing from $28 to $32 per ounce, and year by year it is more scarce. Therefore it is reserved for the finest perfumes. Musk, which when genuine is nearly as costly as ambergris, also possesses in a very great degree the same powers of fixing and developing odors, but it also bears with it its own peculiar and powerful scent, and can consequently be used in only the heavier bouquet extracts, such as Jockey Club and Ess. Bouquet. Whenever a perfume stains a white handkerchief it is unquestionable evidence that the maker of it used as a fixateur some of the cheap gums.

Most of the colognes made in this country, and all the cheap ones, are compounded with patchouli and sandalwood oil. Sachet powders are growing in popularity, not only for keeping in bureau drawers and trunks, to perfume the clothes therein, but for wear. Ladies have them inclosed in little bags and wear them like amulets instead of using the liquid perfumes. For them the base is generally composed of ground orris and violet roots. Blighted orange-flower buds are gathered and ground up for these powders, and a little of the finely-ground pods, which have inclosed musk, is often added. By many the perfume of musk is deemed a positive charm against disease. Until recently the retail trade in perfumes has been in the hands of druggists, but now many other kinds of shops sell perfumery at a reasonable commercial profit of 10 or 12 per cent.

THE EGYPTIAN DELTA.

Formation of a Society for Its Exploration—What May Be Found There.

Boston Advertiser.

An exploration society has recently been formed among the archæologists of Great Britain for the purpose of making excavations on the delta formed by the Nile. Hitherto the attention of antiquarians has been turned almost exclusively to Upper Egypt. With one single exception, that of Zoan-Tanis, no excavations have as yet been made in Lower Egypt. This fact has excited wonder. More than ten years ago Lord Dudley remarked to a traveler: "It is strange that you Egyptologists all go up the Nile when there is so much more to be seen down the Nile." This opinion is sustained by the undoubted fact that in the land of Goshen—the position of which in the eastern part of the delta is now known beyond a reasonable doubt—there must lie concealed documents that will throw light on those four centuries which the Israelites spent in Egypt, and will solve many of those perplexing problems which relate to that lost period of Biblical history. A lofty mound is all there is to show where the capital of the land of Goshen once thrived. Who can tell what missing records of those four eventful centuries, of which we know almost nothing save what is recorded in a few verses in the Book of Exodus, may lie buried under that mound? Moreover, the identification of the sites of Succoth, Etham, Pi-hahiroth, Baal-Zephon, and especially of Migdol, will enable us to say with tolerable certainty whether the Israelites crossed the "Sea of Toeeds," in their exodus from Egypt, near where Suez now is, or at the Bitter Lakes, or still nearer Lake Menzaleh. That question settled, we shall be better able to understand how a "strong east wind" could "make the sea dry land and the waters divided." Pithom and Ramses, those "treasure cities," or rather store cities, built by the Israelites during the oppression, for Ramses the Great, will doubtless richly repay exploration.

In the western part of the delta the information to be unfolded is scarcely less interesting. The sites of the cities built by the Hyksos, or Shepherd Kings, are yet to be identified. We know scarcely more than the names of those Kings who reigned over the delta for nearly 500 years, one of whom doubtless appointed Joseph as his "Adon." This period covers the fifteenth, sixteenth, and a part of the seventeenth dynasties. Of the fourteenth dynasty we have the most scanty and untrustworthy information. If anywhere, within the ruins of Xois are the records which contain a key to its mysteries, which may confirm or refute the assertion of Manetho, that it continued 484 years, and was represented by seventy-six Kings. Naukratis, on the left bank of the Balbitine branch of the Nile, once contained a Grecian colony, and the docks for foreign shipping. Its buried records may be expected to divulge facts of as thrilling interest to the student of Greek archæology as Goshen will to the Semitic scholar. Sais, in whose temple Neith, the Egyptian Athene, the mother of all the gods, was invoked and hallowed, whose sculptures were of surpassing excellence, and in whose college Solon taught wisdom, can be no less reluctant to disclose its secrets than were Memphis and Sakara. Scattered over the entire delta are numerous tumuli, and inclosures of unknown origin, surrounded by massive walls, within which sepulchral chambers are known to exist.

The beginning of the work and its extent will depend on the promptness and generosity with which the appeals for funds finds a response. Failure is not possible in such an enterprise, with the indorsement of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Durham, Lincoln, Bath, and Wells, the chief Rabbi, Max Müller, Mr. Robert Browning, Mr. Stanley-Lane Poole, Mr. Reginald Stuart Poole, Sir John Lubbock, J. Villiers Stuart, and many others. At the meeting in London, March 27, Sir Erasmus Wilson presided, and Miss Amelia B. Edwards and Mr. Reginald S. Poole acted as Secretaries. The society is in correspondence with Mr. Maspero, the conservateur of the vice-royal museum at Boulaq, and it is intended that work shall be commenced at several places at once. We need not be surprised to hear of discoveries of more thrilling interest than even the exhumation of the "royal mummies."

A Strange Phenomenon.

A correspondent wrote to Nature from Aberdeenshire, N. B.: "On Feb. 18 this part of Scotland was visited by a furious gale of wind, rain, sleet, and hail. The gale subsided considerably about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. At 8 o'clock the sky was fairly clear, when a black cloud sprang up in the north, and the night became suddenly dark. With the darkness came a tremendous shower of hail. All at once I was startled by a vivid flash of lightning close at hand, but without thunder. At the same instant I found myself enveloped in a sheet of pale flickering white light. It seemed to proceed from every part of my clothes, especially on the side least exposed to the hail, and more particularly and brightly from my arm, shoulder, and head. Though I turned about pretty smartly, and shifted my position, I found it impossible to shake off the flickering flames. When I walked on they continued with me for two or three minutes, disappearing only when the violence of the blast was somewhat diminished. I felt no unusual sensation beyond the stinging of the hail, and no sound except that of the storm. Then and since I have puzzled myself to account for the strange phenomenon, and can only imagine it to have been a peculiar manifestation of St. Elmo's Fire, so well known to sailors during thunder-storms within the tropics. Some of your readers may, perhaps, be able to give instances of a similar occurrence, unique both in my experience and reading."

This letter elicited the following from a Glasgow correspondent:

"Relative to the letter of Mr. James Moir, under the above title, which appeared recently in Nature, I beg to observe that in the Highlands of Perthshire, some forty years ago, two men found themselves enveloped in flames somewhat in the same style as Mr. Moir was on Feb. 18 last. One Mr. John Stewart, who for many years drove the mail gig between Dunkeld and Aberfeldy, told me that on a certain dark night he and another man, climbing a rocky, heathery hight in Rannock, were all at once set on flames by some mysterious fire, which appeared to proceed from the heather which they were traversing, and the more they tried to rub the flames off the more tenaciously they seemed to adhere, and the more the fire increased in brightness and magnitude. Moreover, the long heather, agitated by their feet, emitted streams of burning vapor, and for the space of a few minutes they were in the greatest state of consternation. They believed that they barely escaped a living cremation. Of course their liberal share of native superstition, along with the weird gloom of the night in the weird wilderness remote from human habitation, rendered their position the more alarming. Mr. Stewart did not mention whether the weather was stormy or not; but without doubt the object of their fear was St. Elmo's Fire. The ignis fatuus has been frequently seen in these Highland districts hovering over marshes, rivers, and churchyards, which was believed by the superstitious to be the ghosts of the dead. When the ignis fatuus was seen flickering over the graveyard, it was a sign—with them—that some one was to be buried there soon, and when seen floating over a river it was a sign that some one was to be drowned there that night or soon after, the floating, wandering lights being their ghosts. Drainage, in this respect, has effected many changes."

He'll Get It.

Wall Street Daily News.

A Brooklyn lawyer who has the reputation of securing pensions for men who were within twenty miles of any battle was waited upon a few days ago by a man who thought he deserved something from Uncle Sam.

"Did you go to war?"

"No, but I was in camp at Elmira for ten days."

"Were you accidentally wounded?"

"No."

"Have a heavy fit of sickness?"

"No."

"Get chronic diarrhea?"

"No."

"Contract rheumatism?"

"No."

"My friend," said the lawyer, as he looked at him in a fatherly way, "some pension agents might be discouraged over your case and refuse to touch it, but I shall at once forward your papers for a pension on the ground that you were broken of your usual rest during those ten nights. Call again in sixty days for your back pay. Good morning, sir—next!"

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

CITY-HALL.

The Washington street tunnel will be closed today for gas repairs.

Over 150 dog licenses were taken out yesterday, making over 300 taken out to date.

The payment of the water-tax will be in order tomorrow. Those who pay during the month will be entitled to a rebate of 10 per cent on their bills.

The canvass of the vote for Aldermen will be made tomorrow evening. The new Aldermen will probably take their seats at an adjourned meeting.

Fire-Marshal Petrie starts for New York this afternoon on official business to look at a water-tower there which the city is contemplating adopting.

The City Treasurer yesterday paid out about $80,000 to the police and firemen, and received from the County Treasurer on account of taxes about $150,000.

Commissioner Cregier made an excursion down the river yesterday afternoon to look after some piling being put in, and also to see how the work was progressing on the Bridgeport pumping-works.

Ald. Lawler has been accused of going on the Flaherty bond, which does him a great injustice. He has no sympathy with that individual in his troubles, he says; furthermore, when the bond was given he was sick in bed.

The saloon license of Mrs. Hannah Murphy, No. 191 North Water street, was yesterday revoked on the recommendation of the Police Department. The charge made is that her place is a resort for thieves, and that she has been in the habit of assisting them to escape arrest and evade justice.

The Democratic Aldermen are getting more at sea every day, it appears, in the matter of agreeing upon the committees for the new Council. The late caucus delegated the settling of the difficulty to Ald. Cullerton, Barrett, and Sheridan, but they have been unable to agree upon anything, which has given rise to another movement which seems to favor leaving the whole question to the Mayor. If this fails, the probabilities are that the better element of the Democracy will combine with the Republicans in caucus and arrange things.

The report of the Tenement-House and Factory Inspectors for the week ending yesterday shows that 152 tenements and 76 factories and stores were inspected, and that 87 nuisances were ferreted out and 22 abatements made. The premises reported in bad sanitary condition were as follows: Nos. 268 and 270 South Canal, Nos. 588 and 590 South Canal, Nos. 78 and 80 Canalport avenue, Nos. 572 and 574 South Canal, Nos. 485 to 493 Clark street, Nos. 51 to 53 Taylor, Nos. 116, 224, 228, and 230 North Union, No. 288 East Erie, Nos. 467½ and 537 and 539 South Clark, and No. 1836 Butterfield.

C. W. Dean complained to the Mayor yesterday that some school property, described as the E. ½ of the S. E. ¼ of Sublot 38, Block 14, was being rented, and that Isaac R. Hitt was receiving the rental, notwithstanding the Controller's records showed that it was "vacant." His Honor listened to the story, but upon remembering that the complainant was in arrears to him personally for about $50 rent dating back some years, he was not inclined to be overenthusiastic in the matter. The complaint will be looked into, however, and if the city is being wronged the wrong will be speedily righted.

COUNTY-BUILDING.

In the Weber-McClaughrey contested election case, the taking of further testimony has been postponed until next Friday morning. McClaughrey again takes the lead by 35 votes.

County-Clerk Klokke, it is stated, as soon as his term of office expires, will go to Europe to attend to the brewery in Antwerp, in which his family is interested. It is claimed that he has no aspirations for a reëlection.

Among the fees of the Sheriff's office are the railroad passes which are secured for himself and assistants whenever they take prisoners to the penitentiary or reform-school. Of course the county pays for their transportation all the same.

After tomorrow 1 per cent will be added to all real estate taxes as a penalty for non-payment. The rush to the County Treasurer's office yesterday was immense, and probably $40,000 was taken in during the day. A penalty of 1 per cent is added to taxes for each month that payment is deferred.

The Woman's Medical College is pretty certain of being allowed a representation of three upon the Medical Board of the County Hospital. Commissioner O'Neill favors this, and will advocate it at the board meeting tomorrow afternoon. But there are Commissioners who oppose giving the allopathic schools any further representation, and who believe that they are already as strongly represented as they should be. Tomorrow the matter of putting up additional pavilions to the County Hospital will come up for discussion in the board. There is money on hand to commence the work, and its necessity is conceded on all sides.

The Committee on Town and Town Accounts met and considered the usual batch of bills from Supervisors. Stephen Halligan, Supervisor of the Town of Palos, sent in a bill for the past six months of $66.50, including $23 for burying a victim of small-pox. One of the smallest bills presented was from Edgar Sanders, Supervisor of Lake View, who only charged the county $30 for his past year's services as Overseer of the Poor. There has never been a bill disputed from Lake View since Mr. Sanders has been Supervisor, and no complaint has been made. The total amount expended last year in Lake View for the relief of the poor by the county was only $606.50, while in the Town of Evanston, where it should be less, if anything, $4,498.51 was expended. The committee tendered a vote of thanks to Mr. Sanders. Dr. Webster, of Evanston, was allowed $65 for attending to poor sick people. The Town of Lemont came in with its usual amount for the support of paupers, aggregating $104.

The Sub-Treasury yesterday redeemed $10,000 in silver and disbursed $35,000 in gold.

Judge Dyer, of Milwaukee, is expected to sit in the United States Circuit Court Monday to try the J. B. Doyle counterfeiting case. In case Judge Dyer should not get here, Judge Drummond will try the case himself. The Hon. Mark Bangs, ex-District-Attorney, will defend Doyle.

The internal-revenue receipts for April were $807,140, or $6,000 in excess of the amount collected during the corresponding month last year, notwithstanding that this month is one business day short on account of containing five Sundays. The collections yesterday were $40,675, of which $32,657 was from spirits, $1,956 from cigars, $536 from tobacco, and $2,592 from beer.

The receipts of duties on imports at the Custom-House yesterday were $11,500, and for the month of April $308,707. During the corresponding month last year the collections were $212,000, and for the fiscal year ending July 1 $2,650,000. This year, according to estimates based upon the average monthly receipts, the collections of duties alone will amount to $3,500,000.

The hired help at the Government Building are beginning to lift up their voices against Maj. Drury, the present Custodian. There are sixteen scrub-girls besides numerous janitors and odd-job people who now work from 3 to 7:30 o'clock p. m. for the sum of 75 cents per day, and they are expected to throw in two extra Sundays each month. The cause of complaint against the Custodian is that he has notified them that they must all put in half an hour overtime hereafter or work until 8 p. m. There is already considerable complaint about the alleged needless waste of gas in cleaning up the building after dark, which has been made to the Special Agents, who are preparing a report upon the efficiency of the Custodianship.

The package in which the lost watch-jewels were alleged to have been shipped by Scheyer, of London, to the Elgin National Watch Company, of this city, was again carefully examined by the Custom-House officials yesterday, the inspection being superintended by Col. Wright, Chief of Inspectors, and Barney McCormick, the packer in the Appraiser's office. It was discovered that the jewels were repacked at Liverpool by Stanley & Co. The package was made up of an outer case of wood 16x18 inches square, inside of which were two smaller wooden boxes lined with tin, which was soldered down. The two packages of jewels received just fit snugly into the interior of the tin casing, and the verdict of the Inspectors was that there was no room for a third package, the one alleged to be lost, and that it was never shipped from Liverpool, as consigned. The value of the missing jewels has now dwindled down to $2,066, and instead of being the most valuable one of the three claimed to have been sent, it was the least valuable of the lot. The Customs Inspectors are now nearly unanimous in the opinion that the jewels were never shipped.

OVERHEAD CHECKS.

THE HUMANE SOCIETY AFTER THEM.

A correspondent called attention in yesterday's TRIBUNE to the overhead checks on horses, and stated that it looked as if the Humane Society did not intend to adopt the suggestion of this paper that an end be put to this torturing of "man's best friend."

"I saw the communication," said President Shortall to a reporter, "and I agree with the person who wrote. It is in every way a barbarous and inexcusable cruelty—that of throwing a horse's head up into the sunlight, and twisting the animal's neck. We have been very much gratified with the action of THE TRIBUNE and others in the attempt to educate public sentiment in this direction. There are difficulties in the way of a successful attack upon this barbarism, as there are in many other of our departments, but we have always hitherto been able to overcome all obstacles. In this matter we have sent our officers several days in succession along the streets, particularly to look after the fashionable drivers and coachmen, for as a rule the 'poor man' doesn't worry his horses with overhead checks; and we have now the names of many of our most respectable citizens, owners of these checked-up horses, and those of their drivers, and we shall finish our work in that direction this afternoon. When we have a somewhat full list of these good people we propose to notify them that, in our opinion, they are violating the statutes of the State as well as the ordinances of the city relating to cruelty to animals. If they pay no attention to the notices, we will select one or two of the most flagrant cases, and prosecute the parties for the benefit of all whom it may concern. We would be very glad if those who see instances of this kind of cruelty would make a formal complaint to the society, and send us the names and addresses of witnesses."

STEEL RAILS.

NO MONEY IN THE BUSINESS.

Mr. William Chisholm, of Cleveland, O., the representative of the great iron and steel manufacturing firm of that city, is staying in Chicago for a few days, and was seen yesterday by a reporter of THE TRIBUNE. Mr. Chisholm, when questioned as to the prospects of the iron and steel trade, said that, with the exception of the steel-rail manufacture, everything was in good shape. The price of steel rails had been cut down to figures in which there was no money for anybody. Such rails had been sold at $50 per ton at the seaboard, and could be bought in Chicago at a rate sufficient only to cover the freight charges added to these figures. He could see little hope of any improvement in prices, as there were many new mills ready to begin work. The production this year would be large for this reason, and there was no possible danger of a scarcity of material.

As to other branches of the trade Mr. Chisholm considered that the steel industry was in first-class condition. His firm manufactures almost everything made from steel, and in all lines there is a good demand and prices are fair. The work of the season will be profitable to all. He expressed his sympathy with the movement in favor of the extension of the Siemens' patents, saying that he thought the proprietors of those patents had made little out of them, and ought to be given another seven years in which to reap their reward. As his own firm has five furnaces constructed on the Siemens plan, his interest naturally lies that way; but he denied that there was any monopoly in the matter. Anybody could manufacture under those patents by purchasing rights or paying the regular royalty. As to the present condition of the scheme for extending the time on which the patents run, or the chances of its success, he expressed himself as totally ignorant.

How a Negro Saved a Train.

Lexington (Ky.) Press.

The story is a little late being told, but it is none the less interesting. The passengers on the Louisville train that came up to Lexington one night a week or ten days ago will perhaps recollect that the train was stopped at the crossing of the railroad and the iron-works turn-pike, just a little way out of town. The cause was a signal from a colored man named Oscar Washington, who stood on the track waving a light. He had also built a bonfire on the track, so that the engineer would be bound to see that something was wrong. A huge walnut log had fallen from a freight-train and lay across the track. The log was about four feet in diameter. The colored man, living near, observed the log on his return from work. He could not move it, so he built a fire on the log, and then went on ahead at a safe distance to give the signal. The company offered him a pass over the road for himself and family, but he declined it, having little or no use for the pass. He does not seem to know what value to put on his great service.

A Little Pig's Distressing Adventure.

Palatka (Fla.) Herald.

A Putnam County farmer tells us that a few days since, while walking along the edge of an oak scrub not far from his house, he heard loud squealing from a young pig. Hurrying to the scene of trouble, he found that a large rattlesnake had it by the throat. The pig was making desperate efforts to release itself, but the snake held its tail twisted around a bush, which held him fast. The snake was dispatched and the pig immediately died.

A HYMN OF WORSHIP.

How pure the dawn and bright!
A thousand songs of waking joy arise;
And to the zenith, flooding all the skies,
Mounts the wide splendor of the light.
So rise, my soul! to God.

Filled are the curving brooks
With hast'ning streams and waters running bright;
Dancing and singing in the morning light,
Or gliding into grassy nooks.
So flows my life toward God.

I look for flowers to bloom
Along the margin of these streams; the skies
Of warmer May, with many a fond surprise
Of violets shall cheer my gloom.
Thus do I hope in God.

All nature turns her face
Toward the increasing sun, and prays the fire
That kindles life, and bids the buds conspire
To clothe the earth with forms of grace.
Thus I aspire to God.

The day wanes to its close.
The drowsy herd turns homeward, and the wing
Of every bird is folded: vespers ring,
And weary hearts seek soft repose.
So rest, my heart! in God.

SCOTCH ECCLESIASTICISM.

A FIERCE CONTROVERSY OVER THE QUESTION OF DISESTABLISHMENT.

Since the Reformation Scotland has been largely true to the principles of John Knox. Calvanistic doctrine has prevailed and Presbytery has kept its hold upon the people. But this has been found compatible with much strife and with not a little division. There was a long struggle between Presbytery and Prelacy—a struggle maintained on the one hand by the people and on the other hand by the Crown. Later came the struggle inside of Presbytery itself—a struggle which also lasted long and which gave birth successively to secession and relief, and finally to the Free Church. And now we have this country divided into two hostile camps on the question of disestablishment. To understand this question aright it is necessary to have a knowledge more or less throrough of the ecclesiastical condition of the country. Scotland, as has been said already and as is well known, is mainly Presbyterian. There are, of course, other religious bodies, such as Independents, Episcopalians, and in the large towns, like Glasgow, Dundee, Greenock, and others, numerous Roman Catholics. The bulk of the people, however, is Presbyterian; and it is by and among the Presbyterians that the battle of disestablishment is mainly being fought. The word mainly is used advisedly here, for, although the non-Presbyterian bodies are not directly engaged in the strife, they are not altogether indifferent spectators. Nor are they all on one side. It is natural that the Roman Catholics and the Independents should be opposed to endowments in which they do not participate. It is probably just as natural that the Scottish Episcopalians, although similiarly situated with regard to endowments, should be ranged on the other side. The English Establishment they regard as a sister Church; clerical transfers from the one to the other are by no means uncommon, and consistency inclines them rather to sacrifice than to revenge. The Presbyterian bodies are three in number—the Established Church, which has the legal right to call itself the Church of Scotland; the Free Church and the United Presbyterian Church. The first named enjoys all the emoluments and privileges of a church by law established and by law sustained. The other two are self-supporting—that is to say, they depend entirely upon the contributions of the people. All the expenses of the establishment are defrayed by a tax upon the land, in which are enrolled rural parishes, and by a tax on property in boroughs. All the expenses of the United Presbyterian and Free churches—the payment of stipends, the erection and maintenance of churches and parsonages—must be met by the voluntary gifts of members and adherents of said bodies. It follows that the members and adherents of such bodies are charged with the support of their own particular denomination, and with the support of the Established Church as well. It is quite natural that such a state of things should produce dissatisfaction. It implies wrong, and a sense of wrong gives pain. It deserves here to be stated that the United Presbyterians—a body which is composed of the old Secession and the Synod of Relief, and which, under its new name, dates from 1847—has from the first been opposed to endowments on the ground that they are incompatible with the headship of Christ. The Free Church, which dates from 1843, has, on the other hand, hitherto been opposed to endowment only on the ground of a present expediency. In the first General Assembly, on the day of the Disruption, Dr. Chalmers, speaking from the Moderator's chair, said: "Though we quit the Establishment, we go out on the Establishment principle. We quit a vitiated Establishment, but would rejoice in returning to a pure one. To express it otherwise—we are the advocates for a national recognition and national support of religion, and we are not voluntaries." A reasonably fair calculation would give to the dissenting bodies fully two-thirds of the population. Numerically the Establishment is stronger than either the Free or United Presbyterian Church, but it is greatly outnumbered by both combined, and in point of liberality and general Christian activity it is inferior to either. Such, then, is the situation, and such are the parties to the present strife.

It will be gathered from what has been said above that Scottish ecclesiastical controversies are often attended with grave results. A truce is seldom courted, and if victory is not possible defeat is welcome. Hence the different secessions, and hence the Free Church. It is this peculiar disposition of the people which invests the present movement with more than common interest. What proportions the struggle may assume or how it may end no one can tell. What is certain is that it is stirring the nation to its very depths, and enlisting, on one side or the other, all ranks and classes of the people. Disestablishment is no longer the subject of mere talk. It is a vital question, occupying men's souls. It is disturbing communities, dividing households, and proving itself to be in many a home no longer peace, but a sword. The approaching meetings of the assemblies and synods in Edinburg in the month of May and the probable effects of these meetings on Parliament are giving energy to the advocates on both sides, and the perfervidum ingenium scotorum is finding abundant expression. That the contest is no holiday affair, but an earnest life and death struggle, may be learned from the fact that on the disestablishment side the forces are commanded by the recognized heads of the theological institutions of both the great dissenting bodies. Principal Cairns, of the United Presbyterian Theological Hall, and Principal Rainy, of the Free Church College, Edinburg, are giving the whole weight of their influence to the cause of disestablishment. On the other side the forces have hitherto been less active, but latterly, whether from fear or from a little excess of zeal, some of the leading men of the establishment have given expression to their thoughts. Prominent among them is Dr. Flint, Professor of Divinity in the University of Edinburg, who, a few years ago in Philadelphia, helped to familiarize the American mind with the class of people known as Agnostics. Dr. Flint is of the opinion that the position taken by the United Presbyterians is perfectly consistent, but that the ground taken by Principal Rainy and those who follow his lead is absolutely untenable. Dr. Rainy, he says, is changing the base of the Free Church, whose fundamental principles are not opposed to a State Church and State endowments for religion. According to Dr. Flint, the true course of the Free Church people would be to ask Government to open wide the doors of the establishment that they might be able to reenter and resume their abandoned rights. This view of the case is taken by many of the leading Free Church men themselves, and notably by several of the survivals of the Disruption period. Dr. Begg, of Edinburg, and Dr. Kennedy, of Dingwall, who commands the Highland Contingent, have raised the cry of abandonment of principle, and a prominent Paisley clergyman, a recent importation from the North of Ireland, has, in consequence of the action of Principal Rainy, resigned his charge in the Free Church Communion and joined the establisment. The malicious will say that Mr. MacCoy has not, in his conversion, been unmindful of the loaves and fishes; but the fact of his conversion and the reasons given for the same will still remain on record and will no doubt have their influence.

On the eve of what was evidently meant to be a great and, if possible, decisive struggle the controversy has assumed a new character and taken a somewhat unexpected turn. The leading minds in the establishment have become generous. Dr. Flint says: "The Free Church must present her own claims, must formulate her own demands. The Church of Scotland was not entitled to do so for her, and would be very foolish if she attempted to do so." The duty of the Church of Scotland was not to interpose, but to allow the Free Church full time and opportunity to make known her wishes, to remove as much as possible obstacles out of the way of her realization of them wherever they were reasonable, and to welcome every decision come to and every step taken which tended to bring the two Churches more closely together. Should it be found that the Free Church either could not or would not state what she wanted, or that disestablishment alone would satisfy her, then, it seemed to him, the Church of Scotland might become in duty bound to consider whether or not the election of parish ministers might not be transferred to the whole Presbyterian Church membership and church adherentship of their parishes, and whether or not the minister elected might not be chosen from any of the Presbyterian bodies holding by the Westminster Confession of Faith, if he were willing to subscribe their existing formula. He had on another occasion, in another place, indicated that personally he regarded with favor an analogous opening up of their divinity halls. That Dr. Rainy is not indifferent to the charges of inconsistency brought against him by Dr. Flint, Dr. Begg, Dr. Kennedy, Mr. MacCoy, and others, and that he fully comprehends the meaning and possible consequence of the ground he has taken, is evidenced by what he stated at a recent meeting in favor of disestablishment. "The question," he said, "was between the disappearance of establishments and concurrent endowments, and, for his part, he made his election without hesitation for disestablishment and not for establishment. He was not conscious in making that decision; he was actuated by sectarian feeling or animosity to another Church. But he had the strongest conviction that the question of how the State was to deal with the Church required for its decision that they should carefully guard against any state of things that would have the effect that the State would deal with religion for the purpose of its own political expediency, and under plausible pretexts, and professing high principles, while really they were dealing with these matters on grounds of political expediency. He had no hesitation in saying, without feeling himself in the smallest degree hampered by his antecedents, that he was prepared to advocate frankly this policy of disestablishment, and, if he found his antecedents hampering him, with his present convictions he should make short work of his antecedents. He was not going to sacrifice his convictions to everything of that kind, and the only reason why he did not renounce his antecedents was that he saw no reason for renouncing them. He was conscious in his own mind of having a consistent position, and when he felt his position no longer consistent he would make it consistent not in sacrificing the present."

Fair play beyond all question demands disestablishment; but the right does not always command the victory. There is promise of a keen contest. The first great fight will be in the Free Church General Assembly, which meets the second week in May. Parliament wants the decision of that reverend body. It cannot be said that the indications of the moment are in favor of immediate disestablishment. The Free Church is not a unit on the question. A section of it is weak and hesitating. The establishment is in a position to hold out temptations. The situation is interesting, because on the fate of the Scottish Church depends the fate of the Church establishment in England, one of the greatest strongholds of ecclesiastical power and one of the strongest conservative forces of modern times. A not improbable result of the present is the further division of already divided Scotland.

HIGH VS. LOW CHURCH.

A COLORED STUDENT ORDAINED A DEACON IN ALBANY AFTER BEING REJECTED IN BALTIMORE.

An Albany special has the following:

Mr. Hutchins C. Bishop was ordained a Deacon in All Saints' Cathedral here by Bishop Doane. His papers, which were declared unsatisfactory in Maryland, had been approved by the Standing Committee of Albany. Morning prayer was read by the Chancellor, Dr. Dean, and by Canon Fulcher. The Bishop preached on the reality and identity of the Church. Mr. Bishop was presented by the Rev. C. B. Perry, of Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore. The ordination occurred after the Epistle, which was read by Mr. Perry. Mr. Bishop, after the laying of hands, read the Gospel. The Bishop continued the celebration, which was entirely choral. The Rev. Mr. Bishop preached tonight at St. Paul's Church, Troy, on the invitation of Dr. Francis Harrison. He expects to take work for the present under the Bishop of Albany.

Mr. Bishop was a member of the colored congregation of St. Mary's Chapel, under the care of the Rev. C. B. Perry, one of the clergy of Mount Calvary Church, Baltimore. He had been trained from about the age of 12 years in the day-school of that congregation, and continued, at the request of the late Bishop Whittingham, to pursue his studies under the direction of the Rev. Mr. Perry, until, in September, 1878, he passed the full literary examination and entered with credit the general Theological Seminary in New York. He continued his studies for three years in that institution, and was graduated with honor in 1881. In due course he presented his testimonials required by the canons to the Standing Committee—namely: one from the rector and vestry of Mount Calvary Church, and one signed by the Rev. J. S. B. Hodges, rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, and by the Rev. Dr. Richey, Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the General Theological Seminary, New York, and made formal application for admission to the Deaconate. This application was denied by the Standing Committee on the ground of Mr. Bishop's High Church views, a majority of the committee being of the low school. A bitter discussion in secular and religious newspapers in Baltimore followed, and the feeling in the matter is still warm. It is probable that he will eventually go to Baltimore, and then it will be seen whether or not Bishop Pinkney, who sides with the Low Church people, will inhibit him from officiating in the Diocese of Maryland.

WAR IN THE PULPIT.

FURTHER DETAILS OF THE QUARREL OF FATHER HYACINTHE AND FATHER MONSABRE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Telegraph thus describes the recent quarrel of Père Hyacinthe and the Rev. Père Monsabré, one of the most popular and eloquent preachers of the Roman Catholic Church, who has been delivering a series of sermons at Nôtre Dame during Lent. In the course of his sermons, or, more properly speaking, theological lectures, from the pulpit of the metropolitan Cathedral, Père Monsabré expressed views with which his predecessor, who also belonged to the Dominican Order before he seceded from the Church, did not agree. These were notably on such questions as the supreme monarchy and infallibility of the Pope and the legality of the inquisition. Accordingly M. Loyson wrote to Père Monsabré, challenging him to discuss these matters "on neutral ground" and in "respectful, pacific language," leaving to the Dominican orator the choice of a locality for the verbal encounter. Père Monsabré replied that a public discussion of such matters between two leaders of different schools might, and probably would, degenerate into a scandal, as the audience, however chosen, could scarcely be expected to maintain the calm attitude imposed by the speakers on themselves. He, however, proposed a quiet conversation on the subjects named, feeling convinced that he could answer M. Loyson's objections to certain doctrines in such a manner as to oblige him to respect the arguments put forward. Père Monsabré concluded his letter in the following terms: "You have ceased to believe. I believe still, and hope to die faithful to my creed. It would be a great consolation to me if my prayers to God could result in the return of your soul to the convictions which illuminated your youth. Accept, sir, the assurance of the sentiments of Christian charity with which I have the honor to remain, your compassionate brother in our Savior." In reply to this epistle M. Loyson repeated that it would be possible to insure a quiet hearing for the great discussion. M. Loyson, however, took exception to the "compassionate" tone of his opponent's letter, accused him of ultramontane arrogance and stoutly refuted the statement that in leaving the Church of Rome Father Hyacinthe had "ceased to believe." Père Monsabré replied:

> SIR: Confine yourself to your meetings where you have already refuted my doctrines, call in all whom you wish to convince, and cease to challenge me to a public discussion, which, I repeat, could not serve the interests of truth. I am at your disposal for such explanations as you may ask for without scandal. I had no intention of offending you, and I beg you to forgive whatever arrogance you found in my last letter. May God bless you. FR. MONSABRE.

Nettled at the haughty indifference of the popular Dominican, M. Loyson closed the correspondence by announcing his intention to publish the letters which had passed "in order that the public might appreciate this singular justification of the past when the Church imprisoned and burned its adversaries with whom it now refuses to debate." The latter concludes with an intimation that Père Monsabré is not acquainted with the behavior common to well-bred people. The matter is thus at an end, and a hostile encounter avoided.

GENERAL NOTES.

The Gospel of Mark has been published in the colloquial language of Japan.

The Church of England has 907 churches in London, 476 of which have surpliced choirs. Ritualism is increasing.

The Methodist Bishops will meet in Detroit May 9 to exchange views on the work to be done, and agree on their appointments.

An evangelistic hall is to be erected in Edinburg as a memorial of the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. It is to be placed near the residence of John Knox.

At most of the Baptist churches in the West and Northwest special attention will be devoted this morning to the financial needs of the Morgan Park Seminary.

The Methodists of the Carolinas are arranging to establish a summer resort, modeled on that of Chautauqua, at Henderson, N. C., which it is stated possesses fine natural attractions.

The New York Herald intimates that there is an understanding between Talmage and Ingersoll. Hence this vivisection of each by the other. The intimation does Pope Bob an injustice.

The net profit of the New York Book Concern of the Methodist Episcopal Church was $69,064, and of the Western Concern $25,466, a total of $94,530 during the last year. This large property trust is wisely administered.

A missionary meeting under the auspices of the Rev. and Mrs. W. F. Bainbridge will be held Wednesday afternoon at Fairbank Hall, Music Hall Block. A similar meeting will be held Thursday evening in the Second Baptist Church.

George Jacob Holyoke, the noted English agnostic, rebukes those ministers of the Gospel who favor the permission of the atheists to take an oath in Parliament. He affirms that "the Jesuits have never maintained openly a doctrine more immoral than this."

There are ten groups of churches all subject to a general council. These are: Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem, Russia, Cyprus, Austria, Mount Sinai, Montenegro, and the Hellenic Church. The number of members in all of the branches is nearly 75,000,000.

The Vicar of Coppenhall, England, recently spoke, in a sermon, of the Bishops as "flunkeys" of the Privy Council. A meeting of the parishioners was subsequently held, at which resolutions were passed calling upon the Bishop of the diocese to proceed against the Vicar for illegal practices.

The recent demonstrations at Inverness by Dr. Raney in favor of disestablishment of the Church of Scotland has been followed by another on the other side, called by Drs. Kennedy and Begg. It is said great preparations were made and strenuous efforts put forth for a large attendance. The Presbyteries nominally represented contain 147 ministers, of whom only forty-two were present.

The missionaries in India are now making arrangements to hold a ten-year missionary conference in Calcutta during Christmas week of the present year. They invite to it all Protestant missionaries, not only from India, but throughout the world. The latest conference of this kind was in 1872, and was of great advantage in bringing together many missionaries who otherwise would never have met.

The Episcopal Church Congress, to be held in Richmond during the four days beginning Oct. 24, will have a new topic of discussion each half, beginning in the afternoon of the first day, as follows: Position and Work of the Laity in the Church; Priestly and Prophetic Functions of the Christian Ministry; Relations of the Church to the Colored Race; The Powers of Standing Committees; Inspiration of the Scriptures; Christianity and the Criminal; The Requirements for Confirmation.

The Boston Congregationalist still keeps up its opposition to the election of Prof. Smyth to the chair of Systematic Theology in Andover, on the alleged ground that his views on eschatology are not orthodox, and cites in support of its position the action of the Indian Orchard Council of 1877, in rejecting Dr. Merriam because of his declaration: "In regard to the matter of eternal punishment of those impenitent at death, I believe the Bible does not teach it; nor do I believe it teaches the contrary. It leaves the question an open one."

Mr. Linn, of the Pottawattomie Agency, says of the pagan Indians under his care that they worship a Creator. "To Him they appeal for relief in sickness and misfortune. To Him they render thanks for the blessings of health, plenty, and happy associations. They have deep religious convictions, and express them in a fervent manner. There are but few gatherings among them but what the subject is introduced, and no one can doubt, who has heard their views expressed, but what they have the most complete faith in their perfection, and that by strictly adhering to them they will be enabled to reach a place of happiness hereafter."

The late Dr. Colver had great originality and quaintness of expression, and always adapted his language to the capacity of his hearers. As he was lecturing to a class of colored theological students one day on the composition of a sermon, in the presence of some white visitors, he said: "You should always be careful to have at least two mule's ears to every sermon." The white visitors looked at each other in blank surprise, not knowing what to make of such a strange remark, but the colored students seemed to be in no such difficulty, and to enjoy the remark greatly. They were accustomed to ride mules without saddle or bridle, and thus were compelled to hold on by the ears; and they knew that the mule's ears were something to catch hold of and hold on by.

Much complaint is made by Sunday-school teachers and others in regard to the infelicitous selection made by the International Lesson Committee of the portion of Scripture which was assigned for Easter Sunday. Instead of selecting something bearing on the idea of life from the dead, this committee had the bad taste to select for the Easter lesson the beheading of John the Baptist. This is a ghastly subject for such a festival occasion. The only apology for selecting it was that it came in the regular course in the Gospel of Mark. This, however, is not quite as outrageous a selection as one which another lot of brethren made some years ago for Christmas. The course for that year embraced the whole life of Christ, and brought the lesson of the Crucifixion on Christmas-Day. There are many of the supporters of the International Sunday-school system who make but little account of the saints' days and similar festivals in the course of the year. But the observance of Christmas and Easter has now become so general that the introduction of an execution or a funeral scene on such an occasion is very distasteful to a large majority of Christian people.

The twenty-eighth annual session of the Western Unitarian Conference will be held in the Unity Church, Cleveland, beginning May 4 and continuing five days. Addresses on topics of general interest connected with Unitarianism in the West will be delivered by Messrs. G. W. Cutter, of Buffalo; J. R. Effinger, of Bloomington, M. E. Ingalls, of Cincinnati; T. B. Forbush, of Detroit; Judge McKeighan, of St. Louis; W. C. Gannett, of St. Paul; G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee; Prof. Cary, of Meadville; Charles G. Ames, of Philadelphia; Miss Mary E. Eastman, of Tewksbury, Mass.; Mrs. Kate G. Wells, of Boston; and others. The Women's Western Unitarian Conference and the Western Unitarian Sunday-School Society will meet during the same week.

The multiplication of sects goes on apace, and at the present rate of growth it won't be long until the sect makers will have difficulty in finding names for their bantlings. The "Faithists" and "Free Presbyterians" are the latest accessions to the list. The former intend to worship Jehovah in the use of vegetables instead of meat for food. They consider the destruction of cattle, sheep, poultry, etc., for human food a violation of the Divine law and contrary to the spirit of faith. The "Free Presbyterians" are a revolt from the strictness of Presbyterian discipline, which disallows good women speaking before promiscuous congregations. Dr. See, of Newark, was obliged to leave the Church because he permitted a godly woman to address his congregation, and Dr. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, was admonished by his Presbytery for allowing Miss Smiley to address his people.

A NEW RELIGIOUS ENTERPRISE.

Prior to the War there was living at Rockford, in this State, a lady of strong religious fervor and zeal, and one who was zealous to contribute something towards the elevation and improvement of society and mankind. After several years of quiet but unflagging effort in various ways to aid in this improvement, in which she had the kind encouragement of friends, who knew her sincerity and had confidence in her ability and perseverance, she found herself at St. Louis, and some years before the outbreak of the Rebellion she had begun a series of lectures upon the general topic of the advancement of woman as an active agent in the great work of social elevation and improvement. This advocacy of woman as an active laborer in the moral and social improvement of the age was then a comparatively new undertaking, requiring not only ability of an intellectual character, but also courage to enable the woman advocate of woman's course to withstand the objections, the indifference, and the neglect of the general public, but also of women, which were all in the way of what was then too often sneered at as the mission of the "strong-minded" of the sex. This lady, Miss Delphine Baker, had the courage, however, to engage in the work, and her labors were very successful.

The subsequent breaking out of the War, however, largely developed woman's field of usefulness, and Miss Baker soon found numerous purposes to which she could devote her abilities and her industry, not only to benefit mankind generally but also in the service of the country, and especially in the service of the soldiers on the field.

In course of time she had added to her labors the publication of a newspaper devoted exclusively to the cause of the volunteers; it was published for them, and to promote their interests, and to improve their condition mentally and morally. We need not go on and recapitulate the story of all that the patriotic women of the country did for the country, and for the army and navy during the War. Their work was visible everywhere, and was apparent in every form. Conspicuous among the foremost in all these services, and active in them all, was Miss Delphine Baker. She found friends and laborers everywhere, who were inspired by her courage, and one great work which resulted from her persevering endeavors was the organization, founding, and endowment by the Nation of the Soldiers' Homes. These tell their own story. During all these years this lady has been prosecuting her labors of benevolence, and has had the support and countenance of the officers of the Government and those in the public service.

The lady is now in Chicago, called here particularly by the illness of her mother, but has now in hand the undertaking with which she expects to crown the labors of her life, and this is the establishment and putting in active operation the publication of a Christian newspaper in Jerusalem. For this she has been working in various ways for many years, and to its carrying out she has been directing her thoughts and mind for several years. She has enlisted the active and substantial support of earnest people in various parts of the country, and has made arrangements for taking with her to Jerusalem when the mission shall be thoroughly and substantially established a complete outfit for a well-supplied printing-house. She proposes to enter the work with a full supply of the tools and appurtenances, so that there will be no failure because of the lack of any of the materials necessary for the purpose.

We are not informed as to the details, nor as to the time, nor as to the agencies which are expected to coöperate in this enterprise, further than the paper is to aim to represent at Jerusalem the cause of Christianity; that it is to disseminate from that point Christian teachings; that in the form of a newspaper published in the English and perhaps in other languages the news of the Christian world will be published in Palestine, and the news of Palestine will be collected for the Western world.

The construction of a railroad from Joppa to Jerusalem, which is now becoming one of the certainties, will make Jerusalem a part of every journey to the continent; and the railroad with its daily trains will necessitate the erection and provision of hotels, and the newspaper will become an almost essential part of this modernization of the institutions of the Holy Land. Miss Baker, who is well known to a large circle of friends in Chicago, will probably soon confer with and seek the coöperation of the Christian bodies of this city and of the West, and in so doing will furnish more details of her plans, of which we have only given a hasty and necessarily imperfect sketch.

PERSONAL.

The Rev. Dr. Nathan Brown is revising his translation of the New Testament into Japanese.

Moody and Sankey have declined for the present an urgent invitation to enter upon a year's evangelistic work in London.

It is rumored in English church circles that unless his health speedily improves the Archbishop of Canterbury will resign.

The Rev. Drs. Robinson, Tremaine, Stone, Burgess, and Walker, prominent Eastern clergymen, have taken their departure for a summer tour through Europe.

Bishop Talbot (Episcopal), of Indiana, who is South, is slowly recovering from paralysis. His speech has again become natural, and he has some use of his limbs.

The Rev. Charles R. Treat, son of the late Secretary Treat, of the American Board, has applied for admission into the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is at present Chaplain in Antwerp, Belgium.

The Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, of Trinity Church, Boston, will spend the next year abroad. His parish has just granted him leave of absence, and it is understood made the proposition to him in order to give him a thorough rest, he consenting on condition that his pay should be discontinued and that a suitable substitute should be secured for the year.

The year 1884 will be the 500th anniversary of Wyclif's death. A Wyclif society is being formed in England, which has for its object the publication for the first time of the complete works of that great reformer. It is proposed to secure at least 250 members at a guinea a year, and it is hoped that in ten years all of Wyclif's genuine writings will have been given to the world.

SUNDAY MUSINGS.

The rumor that the life of Jesse James is to be published as a Sunday-school tract in Missouri lacks confirmation.

By our parson perplex,
How shall we determine?
"Watch and pray," says the text;
"Go to sleep," says the sermon.

The clergymen of Lampasas supply the prisoners in jail with manuscript sermons to read during their leisure hours. The way of the transgressor is hard, very hard.—Texas Siftings.

Translated from the Omnibus: Widow, to her dead husband, who to her as a ghost appears—"How goes it to thee, dear Hugo, on the other side?" Ghost—"Very good—much better than it to me during our twenty years of married life upon earth gone is." Widow, joyfully—"Then art thou in the heaven?" Ghost—"No, in the hell!"

The religious education of the young is terribly neglected in this country. "Are you a Methodist?" "No, sir." "A Presbyterian?" "No, sir." "Well, what are you?" "Why, sir, if anything, I am just a little Episcopalian on the mother's side."

Many good people find themselves, sometimes to their own surprise, in the condition of the little boy who on being asked whether he would rather have a Bible or a jewsharp, hesitated a moment and then replied, "Well, if it don't make any great difference with God, I would rather have the jewsharp."

The other day a book-agent took refuge under a hay mow during a severe thunderstorm. The lightning played round his hiding place for half a hour, and then struck a church a hundred paces off and set it on fire. This shows beyond a doubt that natural forces are blind, and that there is very little intelligence in the operations of Nature.

"A very fine sermon, Mr. Jones," said Dea Brown to the parson at the close of service yesterday. "Several laps ahead of anything you ever gave us before." "Yes," replied Parson Jones, blushing slightly. "I think myself that I made a pretty good score." Thus doth the virus of the walking-match permeate and pervert all classes of society.—San Francisco News Letter.

The Rev. Whangdoodle Baxter has the most flourishing Sunday-school in Austin. A few Sundays ago he asked one of his pupils:

"Who is dat ar mysterious bein' from whom nuffin' am hid, who sees and knows eberyting what happens? I axed yer dat queshun las' Sunday, and I now wants de answer."

"I knows hit. My fodder tole me de right answer," said one boy.

"Well, den, who does yer fodder say am dat mysterious bein' who knows all things what happen?"

"De foahman ob de gran' jury."

Lord Shrewsbury is known wherever the English language is spoken as the representative philanthropic nobleman of England. He is equally at home at an assemblage of a Washerwomen's Benevolent Association or at a meeting for the evangelization of the South African Savages. His kindness of heart is often publicly recognized. "I am very glad indeed to meet you, my lord," said Mr. Spurgeon to him at a large meeting the other night; "and I have one request to make of your lordship. It is that your lordship will be good enough to keep out of heaven as long as it may be personally convenient for you to do so."

CHICAGO ELECTRICAL.

Annual Meeting of the Society—Its Aims and Their Accomplishment.

A called meeting of the society was held in Room 32 Union Building yesterday for the election of officers and amending the constitution.

By the amended constitution, which was adopted unanimously, all routine business is hereafter to be transacted by the Executive Committee, and will not, as heretofore, interfere with public meetings at which papers are to be read or lectures given.

The following officers were elected without opposition for the ensuing year: President, Dr. Roswell Park; First Vice-President, Charles H. Wilson; Second Vice-President, B. E. Sunny; Secretary, F. D. Willis; Treasurer, E. P. Warner.

The retiring President, Mr. C. C. Haskins, then addressed the society with the following remarks:

The closing of the present year of this association and the retirement of the outgoing officers induce me to offer in behalf of the Executive Committee a word in relation to the present status of the society.

We feel we are indebted to many kind friends who have lent us a helping hand and aided us materially in many ways. The cordial thanks of the society are due to the gentlemanly proprietors of the Grand Pacific Hotel, who have so generously furnished rooms for meetings during the past two years, and cheerfully provided every convenience and aid in the furtherance of our wishes. The daily press has cordially assisted by granting us the use of its columns in notices of meetings and papers read. Numerous firms, among whom prominently stands the Western Electric Manufacturing Company, have repeatedly loaned valuable apparatus and other adjuncts, while gentlemen of high positions in the scientific world have generously given us of their time and abilities for our instruction and entertainment.

The past year has been productive of most gratifying results. Our society is fast winning its way to a place among the scientific associations of the world. To make it a permanent and prominent Chicago institution is our chief end and aim; but to do this is a labor of time and earnestness. We have to repeat the life-history of all scientific organizations.

Originally one of several similar societies auxiliary to the American Electrical Society, it was hoped that in that special section of science indicated by its name sufficient interest would be developed to restrict its researches to that particular specialty. To cement and maintain an organization of that character required too great a sacrifice of time and labor on the part of its members, who are mostly telegraphers or employés in other enterprises of a kindred nature. The natural result of this condition of affairs was a dearth of material to fill the requirements of our monthly meetings and maintain the interest of the membership.

After much discussion the Executive Committee of 1880 decided to accept papers upon any subject which by a fairly liberal interpretation could be said to be related to electricity. It may be asked, apropos of recent interesting papers to which the society has listened, What have astronomy and the origin of the world, or the currents of the ocean, to do with electricity? What, may we ask, has coal to do with the electric light or sending a telegram? Or the heat, and light, and moisture of the coniferous and fern era to do with either? Those trees and ferns assimilated forces disseminated by the sun, which were subsequently locked in the firm embrace of the coal. The furnace releases this energy; it is transmitted to the boiler, expended on the piston in the cylinder, and actuates the dynamo-machine; it is changed into an electric current, and today is the motive power which actuates every magnetic and electrical impulse sent forth from the New York and San Francisco offices of the Western Union Telegraph Company. This force, stored up so long, long ago, today dispenses with all main battery systems at those two points.

Now, while the Executive Committee has preferred and gladly accepted all proper papers bearing more directly upon electricity, to the exclusion of dissertations upon more distant topics, its members have felt that to accept papers of such a nature, essays upon forces kindred to electricity, has given a wider scope to our knowledge, and imbued our society with fresh life and vigor. It has been our aim to maintain the organization—electrical so far as lay in our power—but to maintain the organization. And it is this policy of action which has preserved the Chicago Electrical from the unfortunate calamity which has befallen all but one other of the associates and coworkers of the parent body.

Is it not better to continue in this course, to live and enlarge the sphere of our usefulness and knowledge by the acceptance of such mental food, rather than to perish of starvation for want of sufficient nutriment of some specific character?

The past has been a proud year for the society. How well the Executive Committee has acquitted itself the society must judge. The incoming board has the best wishes and hopes of the retiring officers; and that their labors may be crowned by far greater success, that they may accomplish more eminently satisfactory results, is our fervent wish and earnest desire.

SONNET.

For The Chicago Tribune.

Sometimes the Poet's spell is lost on me;
The sweet, true words lose power to please or teach;
And void to me is Music's tender speech;
Nor have I ears to hear or eyes to see,
Or any heart for Beauty's mystery.
But O sad days! though Beauty fail to reach
The deadened soul, some faith you seem to teach
In Life's unfelt, eternal harmony.
O when our sleeping souls forget the night,
In the auspicious dawn that yet shall come,
The Universe will be no longer dumb,
But flooded o'er with new and glorious light;
Then shall we say in ancient words come true,
Behold for us the Heavens and Earth are new!

GRACE S. WELLS.

Vigorous Noblemen and Statesmen.

American Scottish Journal.

An American newspaper, speaking of the approaching marriage of the Duke of Westminster, who is 57 years of age, to Miss Cavendish, who has only attained her 25th year, alludes to the bride as being "sacrificed to senility." To talk of senility in the case of a healthy man of 57 is preposterous. The Duke has only succeeded his father thirteen years. There have been heirs—the son of the great Burleigh was one—who have not come to the title until past the Duke's age. Marlborough was 58 when he won Blenheim, Madison 58 when he became President of the United States, and Lincoln within two years of it when he died. Does any one associate senility with such men at that age? Mr. Gladstone, now Prime Minister at 72, did not hold that office until he was 59, while Lord Beaconsfield first held it when 64. President Grévy is 69. The elder sister of the new Duchess of Westminster is, curiously enough, married to a nobleman—the Earl of Leicester—some twenty-five years her senior, who is a remarkable example of a child of a very happy marriage where there was a great disparity of years. Although himself only 60, his father, the famous agriculturist known as "Coke of Norfolk," was 48 when Washington died. When he was 70 he married a young lady whom in infancy he had danced upon his knee, and whom he used then to call his little wife. It was a very happy marriage, and "shook the next heir in his easy chair, and made him cry God bless her," since it resulted in four sons and a daughter. Louis Leicester survived this marriage twenty years, and died at 90.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

To What Poor Families in New York City Must Submit—12,850 Evictions on Two Hours' Notice—New York and Ireland Compared—The Power of Heartless Agents.

New York Herald, April 26.

The great interest manifested by so many citizens of New York in the efforts that have been made to better the condition of the Irish tenantry recently led a Herald correspondent to call the attention of the public to the fact that here in this city evictions are as common as in Ireland and much more summarily carried out. He pointed out this difference between the Irish and the American landlord, that the one has not and the other has the power and legal authority to evict his tenants on two hours' notice to leave, and said that the Herald would be doing a good thing if it would bring this arbitrary and unfeeling Landlord-and-Tenant law to the notice of the Legislature before its adjournment in order that it might be repealed.

The writer, in his condemnation of the law as a stigma and a stain upon the city, and the State, and the statute-books, simply expressed the opinions of thousands of voters. There are very few residents of New York who from time to time have not witnessed the sight of a family turned out into the street, not knowing where to go, the victims of a harsh landlord's summary measures. A saddening picture, too, the toiling, industrious father, whose long hours of hard labor have not served to meet the rent, the wretched mother, surrounded by her unfortunate little children, or even carrying her youngest born in her arms, the household goods piled in confusion all about them—this heartrending scene of a homeless, hungry, and dispairing group is too often to be met with in the more thickly populated districts. It is all very true to say that the landlord is entitled to his premises, that the tenant's term has expired, and that they have no right to remain over time, and that other people are waiting to move into the house; but it can be said on the other side that the tenant is entitled to humane treatment; that it is wrong and cruel to turn a family into the streets upon an hour's or two hours' notice, and that a landlord who is possessed of any kindness of heart would save little children at least from the miseries of homelessness and hunger. Is it any wonder that the thousands upon thousands of the city's hardworking and honest poorer classes should from their own sad experiences denounce the Landlord-and-Tenant law as shameful and unjust?

METHODS OF EVICTION.

The present Landlord-and-Tenant law has been in operation since about 1857. Before that time what was called the Distrain law existed. Under it the landlord who had unprofitable tenants was empowered to seize their goods as security for non-payment of rent. This same law obtains in New Jersey and other States at the present time. New York, however, abandoned it about the year above mentioned for the present law, which provides two methods for evicting tenants. One process is called the "hold over." This means that the tenant is remaining on the premises over time; that he is holding over. The petitioner or landlord seeks possession of the premises, not rent. The other is called the "non-payment," and in this the landlord seeks to dispossess the tenant because he has not paid the rent. In the non-payment proceedings the answer is made returnable in from three to five days after service of the papers in the case on the tenant. The tenant, therefore, is given full time to settle with the landlord, get ready with his defense, or seek other quarters. Against this part of the law no objection can in any fairness be made. It is alike just to both landlord and tenant. The two hours' notice can never apply to it. Far different, however, is it with the "hold-over" proceedings. To them is to be attributed all the harsh and summary acts the law is credited with. They seem to have been established for the especial benefit of the landlord. The only time they can be instituted is either on the day the lease expires or the day after. Should the landlord allow more than forty-eight hours to elapse he has perforce to fall back on the non-payment plea, and then the tenant is secured from injustice. A landlord who is desirous to get rid of a tenant waits until the day the lease expires. Then he repairs to court, obtains a "hold-over," and turns it over to the Marshal. The papers cannot be served before noon nor after 6 in the evening, but the answer can be made returnable in two hours. It matters not if the tenant or his wife or responsible representative is at home when the Marshal visits the house. In their absence that official nails the paper to the door and goes on his way rejoicing. If the tenant does not return before the two hours are up so much the worse for him. The landlord or his lawyer is in court, and, no tenant appearing, the fact that an answer has not been returned is entered on the court record, the Judge decides in the petitioner's favor, and the Marshal forthwith proceeds to the house, enters the tenant's apartments, and unceremoniously throws all his goods into the street. The tenant returns home at 4 or 5 in the afternoon, and to his dismay finds his property as well as himself without a shelter.

THE POWER OF THE LANDLORD.

It will be seen what power this puts into the landlord's hands and what injustice can be wrought through it to the unfortunate tenant. A favorit dodge of many landlords and their agents is to issue receipts to their tenants which read that the lease is only for a month. If the tenant is not shrewd he is at the mercy of the landlord. In many instances the tenant moves into quarters which he has every reason to expect will constitute his home until such time as he chooses to seek it elsewhere. With unsuspecting faith in the goodness of heart of the landlord he does not trouble himself about the wording of the receipt. Some fine day, to his great astonishment, he is hustled out of the house by "hold-over" proceedings without ever so slight an intimation having previously been vouchsafed him by the tricky man to whom he has paid his rent. The tenant, say, has punctually paid his rent and gives every indication of continuing to do so. What, then, is the landlord's motive in evicting him so summarily? Because some other party has come forward with the offer of higher rent. Some time since a case similar to this was appealed from one of the district courts to a higher court, the tenant holding that when he hired the premises he did so until the 1st of the following May. The landlord, however, came forward with his receipt to prove that the lease was for a month only, and the tenant lost the case. Since then the landlords have had matters their own way, although there are judges and lawyers who hold different views from those given forth in the decision. An instance of how this law works was brought to a Herald reporter's attention yesterday. A man in the Eighth District Civil Court a short time ago hired apartments from a landlord who, he had reason to believe, was honest and straightforward. He found it necessary to make numerous small improvements, and, as in such cases, he had to foot the bill. When the month expired the landlord raised the rent. The tenant was in rather humble circumstances, but rather than to go to the expense of moving he consented to pay it. At the end of the next month he was dispossessed under "hold-over" proceedings. He went to a gentleman connected with the court and asked what was the best course to pursue. The answer was that as the landlord was better able to pay lawyers' and other fees it would be cheaper to seek other quarters and a fairer-minded landlord.

SOME STATISTICS IN POINT.

It is a difficult matter to get at any accurate figures in regard to the number of evictions which take place every year in this city. Data of this kind are well nigh inaccessible at any of the civil district courts. In some of the courts books of record are kept; in others this is not the case. The books are not very helpful to a person seeking information, as neither the total number of evictions in the year nor the monthly totals are given. To get at the figures one has to wade through the book from cover to cover. In the other courts the papers are pigeonholed, and each paper has to be taken out and looked at before any information can be derived. The reporter, however, was enabled to get at figures which are very nearly correct. In the city there are ten civil district courts. In these dispossess proceedings can be begun and also in the Marine Court. Within the past twelve months there have been in round numbers 16,000 families evicted in this city, and yet the official reports show that in 18[illegible] the number of families evicted in Ireland were 3,415, the evictions in New York for a period of twelve months therefore exceeding those in Ireland just 12,585! From present indications it would seem that summary evictions may soon be a despised thing of the past. There is a bill before the Legislature which makes it imperative on all landlords to give their tenants five days' previous notice of their intentions. If the bill passes the two-hours' notice will be robbed of all its present harshness. Tenants will be on the alert for such proceedings and prepared for action. But will the lawmakers pass the bill? Some people have an idea that the landlords' lobby agents will compass its defeat. They therefore need closing watching by the friends of the measure.

CHARCOAL SKETCHES.

Popping the Question.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, April 29.—When in the course of human events it becomes necessary to "pop the question," an important era has arrived in the history of every young man. Most men have gone through the ordeal, or expect to. To the former we would not say aught, for their fate is fixed. Some of them no doubt would fain go through that interesting ordeal again—just for the fun of it, you know—but the vast majority of them are satisfied. With them the contract is signed, sealed, and the goods delivered.

But it is to the latter class—those who have never yet popped the question—we wish to say a few words. To them it is the question of all questions, and should require careful and prayerful consideration. It is the tide which if taken at its ebbing, leads on to happiness, or to a sea full of breakers, or words to that effect. Be it known, also, that you cannot pop the question indiscriminately. There is no financial ability displayed in trading jack-knives "sight unseen." In such cases both parties are usually most wofully cheated. Young man, it is not safe to go about blindfolded sticking your head into every noose that happens to be hanging around. A fish that nibbles at everything that floats along displays but little discretion, and is liable to be caught, sooner or later, on a hook that won't let go. It is no nickel-flipping matter, this thing of popping the question. So I say, young man, don't fling your interrogatories about promiscuously.

Some young people do not have to go through this ordeal. They grew up and find this matter all settled—the question asked and answered—by the "old folks." This method, however, is not at all satisfactory to American-born subjects. It is antagonistic to republican institutions, and unscriptural in that it destroys free agency. I have often noticed that fathers and mothers often eat with impunity that which sets their children's teeth on edge. Hence I say, young man, propound your own interrogatories, and, young woman, answer them as thou seest fit, remembering, however, "as the tree falls, so it lieth." I would not have you entirely ignore the wishes of the old folks, however, for very often they know a thing or two you do not suspect. The courting of a young man and young woman with the full knowledge and acquiescence of the old folks, all around, is one of the most pleasing of episodes. You can always see the eye pictured on the old man's countenance as John Henry is adjusting his necktie preparatory to his visit to Jerusha. And Jerusha's ma, "if the coast is clear," involuntarily dusts the parlor twice, and arranges the chairs, in the good, old-fashioned way, you know, on the evening John Henry is coming, even though Jerusha hasn't said a word about coming.

But it is how, and when, and where to pop the question we started out to consider. Just how or when is a matter upon which no mortal man can give satisfactory advice. In nine cases out of ten the question will just pop itself, like the boy that whistled in school. Ten to one it will be asked and answered and half of the preliminaries arranged before you are really aware of it. As a matter of fact, the preacher's ipse dixit plays a very unimportant part in the interest drama, comedy, or burlesque, as the case may be. He brings up the rear, as it were, does the solemnizing, I believe they call it, wishes the happy couple much joy, eats some of the "wittles," pockets the fee, and silently steals away.

But, as before remarked, popping the question is done in various ways. This must be so in the very nature of things. One man can take pills, or turpentine, or even castor-oil—for that matter, never make an ugly face—and go on about his business; whereas another man with just as much courage and moral heroism would rather die than take either. One man can do a thing with impunity, and another man will break his neck in trying. Just so with popping the question. With some it is merely a matter of moonshine, while with others it is a most uncomfortable ordeal, and is like cutting eye teeth, as it were. My sympathies always run out after the young man who is timid on this all-important question. It is agony itself. He is always on the very eve of asking, but never gets quite to the scratch. Like Moses of old, he gets just far enough to see the promised land, but, bless it all, he can't get over the line for the life of him. To tie a man almost, but not quite, in the reach of plenty to eat and starve him to death is horribly excruciating. So it is with the bashful young man. He swears to himself he will ask her the next time sure, and he even rehearses in his own mind the set words he intends to use. His determination increases in a geometrical progression as the appointed time draws nigh. His premeditated angelic delight grows in anticipation of the expected "yes" like soaked beans in a dinner-pot. When the appointed evening arrives he marches forth in his bran new bib and tucker, so to speak, with all the sang froid of a Napoleon before Waterloo. He knows she is his, and by the Eternal he intends to take that Gibralter of his affections before morning or die, and that's all there is of it. He meets the young lady in the parlor at the appointed hour. He feels and she sees he means business. There's blood in his eye, as it were. He cautiously sends out his skirmishers in the shape of a few little pointed, glittering generalities, all intended to draw the fire of the enemy, and thus a full half hour is spent, and nothing is accomplished worth speaking of. I say parenthetically that bashful young man and a timid young woman can scoop up into a conglomerate hotch potch more little sapid giggles and nothings in an hour's conversation than any other two living things, and especially so if they have really arrived at that point in the negotiations where actual business should begin. But by and by the young man thinks of his meditations during the past week, and resolves that he will get down to business, though the heavens fall or the earth swallows him up. He launches forth a "feeler" or two in the direction of the all-important question, but she brushes these little pointed arrows to one side, and they fall apparently unintentionally unnoticed short of the mark. What is a fellow to do under such circumstances? There is no such thing as reinforcements. Is her strange indifference a precursor of No? Does she mean to fight or surrender? Fear of the former and hope of the latter rack his mind within an inch of insanity. He can't back out now, for he has gone too far, and the bridges are all cut behind him. He mechanically meditates upon the fate of that young man who read through the whole sixteen volumes of the Encyclopedia Americana and found no such word as "Give-it-up-Mr.-Brown." Lord, what frozen streaks of chilled lightning shoot up and down his spine! Not a word has been spoken in ten minutes, and the silence is becoming simply awful. In this fearful state of mind he gets up and kicks an innocent, inoffensive old tabby cat that sits dozing by the grate clear into the middle of next week. He would have done an elephant just the same. Standing on this fearful precipice and looking over the frightful chasm, he puckers his lips for the dreadful leap. He looks Jerusha straight in the eyes, and she looks at him, vice versa. He seizes her by the hand and in monosyllabic tones he says, "Jerusha, wilt thou?" when straightway she wilts, and all is calm and serene, gentle as a summer breeze (Good by, John Henry).

MERCUTIO.

LOVE CROWNED.

John G. Saxe in the May Century.

A maiden with a garland on her head,
Sat in a bower between two lovers: one
Wore such a wreath as hers; the other none.
But him, in merry wise, she garlanded
With that she wore; then gayly took instead
The other's wreath, and wore it as her own;
Whereat both smiled, each deeming she had shown Himself the favorit. Though she nothing said
Concerning this by any spoken word,
Yet by her act, methinks, the maid preferred
The lover she discrowned. A friendly thing,
Or whimsical—no more—the gift she gave (A queen might do as much by any slave);
But he whose crown she wore was her heart's king.

Jewels of the Future.

Pall Mall Gazette.

One of the applications of electricity which has not as yet attracted general attention is the magnificent effect which it can produce when employed as a means of personal decoration. A necklace or a bracelet of diamonds of the first water could not compare for brilliancy with the effect of a string of crystals, each containing a tiny filament of carbon heated to incandescence by an electric current supplied from a small Faure battery, which might easily be concealed on the person. At the Crystal Palace there is a diminutive breastpin which can be illuminated by a two-inch Faure battery carried in the pocket of the wearer.

Containing all the essentials of a true tonic, and sure to give satisfaction, is Brown's Iron Bitters.

MUSIC.

The Boston Ideals Close Their Most Successful Season.

New Matters of Interest in Connection with the May Festival.

Chamber Concerts and Some Scattering Musical Notes.

Close of the Engagement of the Boston Ideals.

With a capital performance of "Olivette" last night the two weeks' engagement of the Boston Ideal company was ended, and the organization moved on in search of fresh conquests in new fields. The Ideals have steadily grown in public favor since their first appearance some three years ago, and their present engagement has been the most profitable they have ever filled in this city. For nearly every performance every seat in the house has been sold, and even standing-room at a premium. The company stands at the head of all light opera combinations. Familiar and well-worn airs derive new beauty from their finished interpretation by members of this organization. "Patience" was supposed to have run its course and to have been practically shelved as a performance that would draw full houses. The Ideals have given it to audiences limited only by the cubic contents of the Grand Opera-House, and could have given it for a fortnight longer without diminishing its popularity. The performance was very nearly a perfect one—taken as a whole—and the musical rendering could not have been improved. The drilling of the choruses was remarkable and their work done without a hitch or a blunder, while their singing left nothing to be desired. It will be a pleasure to again welcome this strong, well-managed, and well-equipped company in this city. All their work is well done, and each member strives to make a success not of an individual rôle, but of the performance as a whole. The rumor as to the disbandment of the organization is fortunately an error, and they will still continue to interest and amuse a public always ready to hear and to see them.

The May Festival.

As the time for the May Festival approaches activity increases. The singers are fully alive to the importance of their work as shown by the rehearsal on Friday evening last, which was the best yet had and promises such singing as Chicago has never heard before. In this connection we may state that the mass-rehearsal for next Friday evening will be held in the Exposition Building. No member will be admitted except on presentation of the chorus ticket, and each singer will be entitled to one escort. The workmen are rapidly revolutionizing the interior of the building, and when finished it will be one of the most comfortable and convenient as well as one of the largest concert-halls in this country. The sale of season tickets begins May 8, and this week the building will be thrown open to the public, so that people can examine the arrangement of seats, and thus choose where they wish to sit much better than they can do from the plats on the day of sale. The idea is an excellent one, and will commend itself to the patrons of the Festival.

In all the brilliant array of soloists for the Festival not one will attract more attention than Frau Friedrich-Materna, who is to sing the chief soprano rôles, and who is one of the most remarkable singers at present before the public. As a vocalist possessed of unusual dramatic ability as well as a voice of great compass and exceptional power, she was selected by Richard Wagner for the rôle of Brunnhilde, the Walküre, the most important female character of the "Nibelungen Trilogy." This part is unquestionably the most trying that is to be found in any operatic work, and the grace and spirit with which Frau Materna acquitted herself of her task were alike remarkable. For her presentation of this part alone she has become famous not only in Germany but wherever music as an art is known. It is a matter for congratulation that, although it may be years before the Nibelungen cycle will be heard in America, in its entirety, we shall enjoy at the coming Festival an opportunity of hearing some of the most powerfully dramatic portions of these works, in which Frau Materna will herself appear and will no doubt in great measure repeat the triumphs which she achieved on the occasion of their first performance at Bayreuth. On account of her great dramatic ability she has been selected by Wagner for the part of Kundry in his latest work, "Parsifal," which will be given at Bayreuth during the coming summer.

The chorus rehearsals indicate that the Bach cantata, "Festo Ascensionis Christi," will be one of the best performed works. Though not long, the work contains great variety. It is in five numbers, opening with a short introduction for orchestra, which leads over into a beautiful chorus in A major. This is followed by a tenor aria, a choral for soprano and alto voices, a short recitative for bass voice, followed by an aria for the same, and closing with a simple choral of great beauty. This choral Mr. Thomas intends to have sung entirely without accompaniment, and its effect when given by so large a body of singers will, without question, be extremely impressive.

The Festival Book.

The book of the first Musical Festival in Chicago has been completed, and is now for sale. It is a handsome volume of over 100 pages, and has a good vignet of Mr. Thomas on the title page. It is by all odds the most complete and best arranged of any of the festival books, and will be worth preserving not only as a souvenir of the great festival, but on account of the valuable nature of its contents. It contains a list of the officers of the festival organization, of the subscribers to the guarantee fund, of the soloists, of the members of the chorus, and of the musicians in the orchestra. Short biographical sketches are given of the principal artists, and full programs of the different concerts. The greater portion of the work is devoted to an analysis and explanation of the numbers rendered, and the admirable manner in which this part of the work has been done will give it permanent value. In the case of many of the songs the original as well as the metrical translation has been given side by side. Mr. George P. Upton, the editor of the book, has worked hard to make it as complete and reliable as it was possible for such a thing to be. In this he has succeeded. The price of the book is 25 cents.

Close of the Season of Chamber Concerts.

The Lewis-Ingersoll chamber-concert series came to a close on Tuesday afternoon of the past week at Hershey Hall. Those who have watched the progress and growth of these admirable concerts have been both pleased and instructed. The best compositions of standard authors have been presented with but few repetitions—thus affording the patrons of the series a broad field of authorship of the first order. This modest and unassuming club has steadily grown into public favor solely by reason of its artistic and thoughtful interpretation of the elaborate works treated. It began its work unheralded, and the audiences have grown from small beginnings to large and flattering patronage.

To Miss Agnes Ingersoll (pianiste) the patrons are largely indebted for the selections presented. Also much credit is due to Mr. William Lewis for selecting the best among our resident artists as assistants. Mr. Eichheim (violoncello) and Mr. Allen (viola) need no introduction, for they have long held high place in popular esteem. The works of the season just completed have comprised solo, violin, trio, quartet and quintet (strings), and similar forms of compositions, with the piano as the leading instrument. The authors include Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, Raff, Schumann, Schubert, Reinecke, Sarasate, and others. Many new and important works are to be presented the coming season. Many of our leading musicians and artists who have heard and enjoyed these charming musical concerts predict an increased interest and patronage for the season of 1882-'83. The Lewis-Ingersoll chamber-concerts are allied to no musical organization, and the success so far achieved rests directly upon the mutual efforts of these admirable artists.

Musical Notes and Gossip.

The first rehearsal of "Zenobia" occurs Tuesday evening at Apollo Hall.

Gorman's Church Choir company will appear at McVicker's Theatre May 29.

Herndon Morsell takes Mr. Fessenden's place with the Boston Ideal company.

Mr. Seeboeck gave his fifth concert at Chickering Hall last Wednesday evening.

Mr. C. A. Havens has been engaged as organist of the Second Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Candidus, the tenor of the May Festival, arrived in New York last Wednesday.

It appears to be doubtful whether Miss Cary will be able to sing at the May Festival.

It is reported that Aimée is coming to this country next summer with a new opera bouffe company.

King Oscar of Sweden wrote an autograph letter of condolence to Christine Nilsson on the death of her husband.

Ford's Comic Opera company will produce the new comic opera of "Manola" at McVicker's Theatre next week.

The Kennedy family of vocalists and delineators of Scottish character will give a concert in this city this week.

Mr. Liebling's next pupil recital occurs next Saturday evening at Chickering Hall. Mr. Liebling will go to Europe in July.

Recently the Comly-Barton company presented "Patience" in Philadelphia with the female chorus dressed as dragoon cadets.

The Indicator says that Mr. Fessenden's singing at the Hauk concert "was the best English ballad singing ever heard in Chicago."

The Amateur Musical Club gave a successful musical entertainment last Wednesday afternoon. Mrs. H. W. Raymond, Miss Blanke, and Miss Atwood were the pianists, and Mr. Clark and Mrs. Scheppers the vocalists.

It is proposed to turn the Roller-Skating Rink into a summer-garden and comic opera resort. The building will be considerably altered and suitable scenery provided. The roof of the structure will be the garden, where refreshments will be served between the acts.

An operetta entitled "Penikeese," written by a member of the junior class of Yale, was recently given in New Haven with considerable success, and will probably be repeated in New York and other places. The music for the male choruses is said to be particularly effective.

The next concert of the Mozart Society occurs on the evening of May 5 at Central Music-Hall, on which occasion the society will have the assistance of Miss Fanny Kellogg and Sig. Brignoli. It must be remembered that the entertainments of this society commence promptly at 8 o'clock.

Mapleson has Patti for next year, and claims to be also negotiating with Materna and Gerster. Nicolini is to come, too, but will not always sing with Patti. Abbey feels chagrined, and admits that he "got left," having only a verbal contract with the diva. It is intended that the next opera season shall be a memorable one.

The Freja anniversary celebration will be held at Brand's Hall on Tuesday evening next. The soloists will be the Freja Lady Quartet, consisting of Misses Ingeborg Löfgren, Emma Larson, Anna Cedergren, and Inga Ekström. Mr. C. Brusell is the baritone. The program is a good one, and the occasion will undoubtedly attract a large audience.

William Castle, who is suffering some from a catarrhal affection, has been advised by four prominent physicians to have an operation performed on his nasal organ, which, they say, will be a painful one, but will insure him as clear a voice as he ever possessed. He has decided to have it done right after the close of his present engagement, which continues three weeks longer.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Says the Musical Herald: "Coincident with the Greek play, another antique work has been produced in Boston. It is called 'Pinafore.' The origin of this work is buried in obscurity. It seems to have been at first an adjunct of church choirs. Its leading number is entitled 'What, never?' the second movement of which ('Hardly Ever') is in antiphonal style. There is a rather grotesque 'dead-eye' cation, and the work as a whole will greatly interest modern audiences as a faithful example of the musical customs of early ages."

WEST SIDE HOODLUMS.

Residents of the West Division Threaten to Take the Law into Their Own Hands Unless They Can Receive Police Protection.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, April 29.—Your reporters in search of a sensation can find one by directing their attention to the mobocracy which has supplanted the rule of law and order in the district of this city bounded by Ashland avenue, Hoyne avenue, Kinzie street, and Chicago avenue. Our alleged City Government, it seems, is powerless to protect society so far as this district is concerned. Mobs of howling young ruffians, often armed, always openly defiant of law, order, and decency, parade the streets. They knock down and beat peaceable citizens, they follow, insult, and rob women both by day and night, they destroy shade-trees, tear down fences, break windows, and appropriate or destroy all movable property. They break into shops and outhouses, and, when caught, instead of fleeing they herd together like wolves and endeavor to maim or kill the householder who dares protect his own. The police are like snakes in Ireland—"there are none"—and those who are nominally in charge of the district are apathetic or friendly to the abjectly vile desperadoes, whose ruffianism renders them a terror to all peaceful citizens. If we have no power to protect ourselves through our City Council and so-called police force (thrice too small), citizens must fall back upon their God-given right of self-defense and organize that terror to evildoers, the Vigilance Committee. Let this be done, and let it once write its name in bloody characters upon the foreheads of these "Mohawks," these returned jail-birds, these nightly-howling ravagers of a peaceful community, and their "divlish cantrips" will cease. It is time. These things have gone far enough. "Fiat justitia, ruat cœlum"—let justice be done, though the heavens fall, and though the Government, supported by such pets of ward politicians rock on its base. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," and the Vigilance Committee is its most practical form. VINDEX.

BETTER THAN WE PRAY.

For The Chicago Tribune.

Better than we can ask, O God!
  Thou wilt in love bestow—
Withholding oft some cherished good,
  Hedging the way we go;
But loving arms surround us still,
And wisdom all Thy chast'nings fill.

Better than we can ask, O God!
  Thy love outspeeds the prayer;
And every day but proves anew
  A constant watchful care,
And that our feet may never stray
Where Love shines not upon the way.

Better than we can ask, dear Lord!
  As children oft we cry
For dazzling toys that hurt and bruise,
  Nor doubt they'll satisfy;
But greater good withholds the prize,
And Love still pities and denies.

Better than we can ask, O God!
  Far better than we pray;
Far in the dark we grope along—
  Thou seest clear the way;
Where we are blind, be Thou our sight,
And to our darkness be the light.

Better than we can ask, dear Lord!
  Then we will calmly rest,
As trustfully when skies are dark
  As when gold paints the West;
And with our prayers, we'll whisper still "Not mine, O Father! but Thy will."

Better than we can ask, dear Lord!
  When in the valley drear,
And cold death-shadows round us creep,
  We will not shrink or fear;
We shall not walk the vale alone,
But rest our hands within Thine own.

ON THE BOARD.

The April Shorts Settling Their Wheat Deals at $1.40.

A Local Syndicate Said to Be Behind the Milwaukee Brokers.

Some Prophets Look for a Squeeze in July and a Twist in June.

The April wheat-corner culminated yesterday. The clique offered to settle at $1.40, and as a final effort to force the shorts in bid the price up to $1.42. The April shorts have settled rather freely within the last few days, and the line standing out yesterday is understood to have been comparatively small. The quantity defaulted on was estimated last evening at something like 350,000 to 400,000 bushels, which is supposed to be only about one-seventy-fifth of the entire volume of trading done in April. The deal was a big one, and rumor says the McGeoch combination has made a mint of money. A cool million the gossips declare is a fair estimate. The wheat was bought from $1.17 up to $1.40, the average price being probably considerably below $1.27. The clique had everything their own way. They bought up all the No. 2 wheat in store here—say 3,500,000 bushels—and the daily receipts have been next to nothing. Then they worked the other futures at a profit, and some say they extended their operations into corn. The boys were on the qui vive to know yesterday what the clique intended doing with the cash property. It was given out that they would ship it, and had commenced by loading a cargo of 40,000 bushels. Others said the whole or at least a part of the stock would be dumped on the market Monday, in the form of deliveries on May contracts, and in anticipation of such an event seller May dropped suddenly about one and one-quarter cents. The defaulters have until 11 o'clock tomorrow in which to settle up their April trades, and it is quite likely the clique won't do anything with the cash property till they see how many of these delinquents square up and make it unnecessary to call the committee to fix a settling price.

MR. M'GEOCH HAS BEEN LOOKED UPON generally as the boss of the April deal, and the head of a strong clique of Scottish chiefs who reside in Milwaukee, when they are not in Chicago. It is understood, however, that Uncle Peter's Washington-street firm has been the figurehead merely, and a rather diminutive one, too, considering the bluster, while powerful local capitalists have quietly conducted the deal, and will as quietly pocket the profits, the bulk of which goes into a purse that was already very long, and had to be spliced out for this special occasion. This is the story. The boys think the conductors of this deal have control of the wheat market for July, and will run a big corner in that month, and perhaps June. It is expected they will let the boys run away with June for awhile in order to restore confidence in the market, and entice the crowd to get on the short side. The line of shorts out for the following months is supposed to be considerable now, but hardly so large as the alleged clique desire it should be.

SECRETARY RANDOLPH,

of the Board of Trade, leaves Monday afternoon on the Fort Wayne Road for the East. After passing a few days in New York and other cities he will go to Philadelphia, and sail on May 13 for Europe on the steamer Ohio—the American Steamship Company having tendered him passage out and back. Mr. Randolph will be accompanied by his two daughters. He expects to land at Queenstown, and after "doing" Ireland will visit England, Switzerland, Germany, and perhaps Scandinavia and Italy, taking Paris on his return to Great Britain. Mr. Randolph will probably be abroad about five months. The Directors of the Board of Trade voted him six months' leave of absence. He says he goes for recreation only, and hopes to have a quiet pleasant vacation.

"GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK"

has been received by the Board of Trade. It came all the way from Antwerp, Holland, and was unpacked yesterday. The clock's credentials have not yet arrived, consequently the Secretary is unable to say anything about the history of this ancient timepiece, or why it has been sent to the Chicago Board of Trade.

The Governing Committee of the Call Board voted yesterday to exclude clerks from the call-room during trading hours. This action was taken to give the members more room. It will cancel about 100 clerks' tickets.

EARLY CLOSING.

The Wholesale Houses to Close Saturday Afternoons at 2 O'Clock.

We, the undersigned, importers of foreign merchandise, agents of importers of foreign merchandise, of sugar refiners, manufacturers, and dealers in sirups, and brokers in merchandise in Chicago, in accordance with the custom established last year, agree that we will from the 1st of May to the 15th of September, 1882, close business every Saturday at 2 p. m. And it is definitly agreed by and between the undersigned that during the period of this agreement no sales whatever will be made on Saturday after the hour specified. We trust that for the obvious reasons which have led us to this agreement the wholesale grocers, spicemen, and tea-dealers will adopt similar unanimous action.

THE ILLINOIS HUMANE SOCIETY.

The work embraced in the month of April is as follows: Complaints of cruel treatment of children investigated, 31; parties prosecuted, 6; children surrendered to charitable institutions, 15; cases of children relieved without prosecution, 16; complaints of cruelty to horses investigated, 41; prosecutions for cruelty, 14; disabled horses removed from the streets by ambulance, 8; abandoned horses mercifully killed, 5. A dealer in cattle arriving on the Fort Wayne Railroad was arrested and fined $10 and costs for cruelty in overloading cars and for leaving a suffering cow that had been trampled under foot, all day without assistance, food, or water. Many of the flagrant abuses at the Stock-Yards have ceased, though there will be room for work at that point as long as the trade is in existence. There have been complaints of cruelty to the smaller species—viz.: birds, dogs, fowls, turtles, etc., that were found deserving of attention. The ordinance prohibiting the throwing of glass, nails, and other sharp and hard substances into alleys, involving danger to horses' feet, was violated in several instances through thoughtlessness or ignorance, and upon information to the parties was stopped. Whole number of cases, 80—a case frequently involving two or more horses and persons.

Some of the interesting cases dealt with through the month are as follows: A man charged with a criminal assault upon his young stepdaughter seemed likely to go unpunished. A clergyman to whom she had appealed informed the society, which at once took steps to have him apprehended, and employed a physician to examine the case. At the preliminary examination he was bound over to the Criminal Court in the sum of $1,000.

Two little girls, aged 10 and 11 years old, were enticed into a building by three men on State street and kept there a night and a day, and indecently assaulted. The men were locked up by the police upon a charge of disorderly conduct. This was thought to not cover the charge against them and the society was appealed to. Officer Dudley and Joseph Wright, Esq., Attorney for the Society, took hold of the case and had the fathers of the unfortunate children swear out warrants for abduction before Justice Hammer. Two of the men were held in bonds of $1,000 each to the Criminal Court, and the bail of the remaining one fixed at $600.

The amount of fines collected, exclusive of costs, was $61, which goes to replenish the City and County Treasuries, none of the fines having ever been taken by the society. Consequently, it cannot be named "an interested witness."

AMUSEMENTS.

M. H. F. on the New York Theatrical Outlook.

Special Correspondence of The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, April 27.—The Chicagoan within our gates buying spring goods who desires to pass a pleasant evening at any metropolitan theatre is going to have a very disappointing time of it. He can go see "Hazel Kirke" at Niblo's if he hasn't got enough of that young lady in his own city. He can go see "Esmeralda" at the Madison Square, and renew the acquaintance formed at home during the winter. He can see the fag end of "Claude Duval" at the Standard; the dreadful madding (small) crowd at the Union Square; the most unmusical operetta man ever produced, called "Gírontee," at Daly's—and Daly has produced some wicked old things lately; a lame and impotent conclusion of Grau's French opera season at the Fifth Avenue; and the remnants of vitality displayed in "Youth" at Wallack's. Osmond Tearle and Gerald Eyre and his brother leave for Europe shortly. Their trip is the uppermost thing in mind just now. Miss Boniface and Emma Lorraine leave at the end of the season. Miss Stanley's physician pronounces her health in a precarious condition, and Mme. Ponisi's husband is very ill, so that the cast of "Youth" is suffering in one way and another.

Booth has stormed the country successfully with his Calverts and Barton Hill, but the company is not applauded here, and the houses, though good, are not great. The esthetic Edwin has worn his voice out at the elbows during this prolonged tour and needs rest.

Therefore do I say advisedly it's no pleasure to go see the old things, and it's positive pain to take in the new. The San Francisco Hall is in possession of the "All-at-Sea" party; a man named Jessup, who put together "Sam'l of Posen" for Curtis, compiled from accumulations of bile the structure called "All at Sea." Such utter rubbish is sometimes accomplished by school-boys for barn representation, but seldom does a full-grown man put such trash before the public. Then last Saturday the much-advertised comedy drama "After the Opera" was presented by Gunter at the Park, and a fine companion piece it is for the "All-at-Sea" production. Where the San Francisco Hall scenery is beggarly Mr. Abbey provides the best; where the "All-at-Sea" company is wretched the comedy company is fairly good; but the general result is about the same, and a night after the opera leaves one all at sea, while those who have been all at sea don't hanker after the opera.

In due time both these terrible things will reach Chicago, and you will know how much we are suffering now. Next week we are to have the first of the batch of would-be stars—Miss Eugenia Legrand, the wife of Kyrle Bellew, a young English actor, makes her appearance in a drama called "Solange" at the Union Square (the boys already call it "So long"), designing to stay with us four weeks. If she can stand it perhaps New York can.

There are three elocutionary fiends in treaty with theatrical managers to procure summer openings for starting débutantes warranted to contain more talent to the square inch than Mary Anderson ever dared to.

One of these star-manufacturers brought his particular prodigy to recite to some friends the other night, and I had some idea of that which my blessed countrymen must endure later on. The aspirant hails from the State of Massachusetts, her father is rich (I need not say), she is tall, angular, freckled, with a voice like a penny whistle, and she recited the curse from "Leah." Oh, may mine enemy live to sit out the whole performance when she does it! There are five of these fresh females likely to have a shy at this unhappy city during the summer—and several counties yet to hear from.

Chicago Notes and Announcements.

"Sam'l of Posen" at Haverly's next week.

The past week was a dull one in Chicago dramatic circles, "My Partner" and "The World" being the only attractions.

The Barlow, Wilson, Primrose & West minstrels, the best organization of its kind on the road, will appear at Hooley's during the coming week.

The German company playing in McVicker's Theatre will tomorrow evening produce Sardou's play entitled "Divorçons," which has recently been so successful elsewhere.

That familiar personage Uncle Tom will be at the Grand Opera-House this week in the person of Mr. Jay Rial, who is supported by a good company and a platoon of bloodhounds.

"One Hundred Wives," a drama [illegible] been given with success in all the principal cities of the country during the past year, will be the attraction at Haverly's Theatre this week. Mr. De Wolf Hopper is still the leading member of the company which presents the play.

The mere announcement that Mr. Joseph Jefferson is to appear at McVicker's during the present week will be sufficient to fill that house. On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings Mr. Jefferson will appear as Bob Acres in Sheridan's comedy "The Rivals," Mrs. John Drew taking the part of Mrs. Malaprop. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights and at the Saturday matinée "Rip Van Winkle" will be given.

The bill at the Criterion this week is an exceedingly long and attractive one, and includes George Spence, Minnie Sartell, and George Bunnell, vocalists and sketch artists; Madge Aiston, clog dance; John Willis and May Adams, Teutonic sketch; the St. Elmos, acrobats; Mlle. Bell, songs; McGlone and McAvoy, Irish sketch; Mlle. May, motto songs; Stanford and Russell, dancers; Bernard McCreedie, negro comedian; Vanolar, equilibrist; Armstrong and Wiley, song and dance; Harry Barrett, club-swinger; Harry Athol, contortionist. The whole concludes with the sketch, "Casey's Picnic."

"Cheek" is the name of Fred Marsden's new comedy-drama, written expressly for the popular young comedian Roland Reed. It will receive its initial representation at Hooley's Theatre Monday evening, May 8. The company is now rehearsing at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, under the best possible advantages, and is expected to be in unusually good trim the night of the opening. Roland Reed's popularity in all parts of the country, Chicago in particular, ought to insure for him a brilliant opening house, and from appearances his friends are not overlooking this material part of the approaching engagement. He left last night for New York to join the company, which is now awaiting his arrival.

General Dramatic Notes.

Bob Filkins, late of the Haverly staff, has been engaged by the Frohmans as business manager of their minstrel company.

Joseph Jefferson has presented Attorney-General Brewster, his life-long friend, a fine view of a Southern landscape, painted by the great comedian.

Emma Stokes, the equestrienne, has forsaken the sawdust circle for the stage, and is playing a part in "A Child of the State" with the Hoey-Hardie combination.

Harry Courtaine, who plays the part of Maj. Reckley in "Youth," is said to have nearly spoiled the performances of the play in Philadelphia by "guying" the best scenes.

Charles Warner, who is considered the best melodramatic actor in England, will soon visit this country with the intention of starring in the original part of Coupeau in "Drink."

New York Dramatic Times: Miss Maude Harrison, whose contract with the Union Square Theatre ends this spring, has been offered an engagement to support Salvini next season, in such rôles as Desdemona, Cordelia, etc. Mr. Palmer has also offered an increase of $25 a week on her salary if she will remain with him.

Georgia Tyler, who left Keene's company a week ago "on account of ill health," appears to have recovered very rapidly, as she is already announced as engaged by J. K. Emmett.

The Edwin Forrest estate has finally been settled. After making disbursements under the terms of the will, including $192,000 to the Edwin Forrest Home, the executor has $2,888 on hand.

Byrne's Dramatic Times: Miss Emilie Melville and Tom Casselli, late tenor of her company, sailed for Europe this week. Miss Melville has been living in a private boarding-house in an obscure part of Philadelphia for three weeks. She left there on Saturday last.

Messrs. Herrman and Amberg, managers of the Thalia Theatre, New York, have begun suits against each other for the appointment of a Receiver. Mr. Herrman, who was the home partner, holds that Mr. Amberg paid Geistinger more than her contract called for, with the understanding that she divide with him. Amberg insists that Herrman wasted money while he was away, and that the theatre is behind, spite of splendid receipts. It is one of the features of the Thalia Theatre that the partners get to quarreling toward the close of every season.

London correspondence Dramatic Times, April 11: The right name of Sarah Bernhardt's new husband is Daria. He joined her theatrical company about a year ago and fell in love with her. It didn't seem to hurt him much, all things considered; and he stuck to her when she was mobbed in Odessa. They traveled all the way from Nice to have the ceremony performed, and left the same night for Marseilles, from whence they started at once for Barcelona. M. Daria acts under the name of D'Amala, and will play Armand to Bernhardt's Camille in London in June.

There is much confusion in the English theatrical world at this moment. Everybody lays claim to everything, and nobody can prove the claim. Mr. Barnard has a dispute with the performers of his piece and withdraws "The Manager" while in its full career. Mr. Hardy and Mr. Comyn Carr set up their piece properly founded on "Far from the Madding Crowd" against "The Squire," which gives but a garbled version of the novel. "Ouida" shrieks in dismay at beholding her very nasty romance of "Moths" turned into a diseased and unwholesome production on the stage. They say that Dickens laid himself down on the floor of the box at the Surrey Theatre and howled when he saw the representation of his "Oliver Twist."

W. Irving Bishop says that the version of "Camille" commonly used was bought by Matilda Heron of James Mortimer, the English adapter, and that she transferred the copyright to Mr. Irving with the distinct understanding that it was to be managed for the benefit of her daughter Bijou. Various actresses have acknowledged Miss Heron's right in the piece, and Samuel French & Son state in their printed edition that it is copyrighted in America by Matilda Heron. Now that Bijou and her father, Mr. Stoepel, are back in this country, Mr. Bishop proposes to enforce the girl's right in the piece, and a bill in equity is being proposed against Fanny Davenport as a test case; suits will also be brought against various managers and stars who have produced the piece—among them Clara Morris, Rhéa, and Maud Granger. Miss Davenport claims that the version she played is that used by Laura Keene.

This is the way the male impersonator, Annie Hindle, "the Apollo Belvedere of the variety stage," is billed. Take a good long breath before reading: "The great Hindle has several would-be imitators, but no equal. Having made this particular branch of the profession a life-long study, she defies any and all artists in the same line of business to compete with her for any sum not exceeding $2,000. In voice, style, wardrobe, brilliant expression, and truthfulness of character in her impersonations she stands unequaled by any artist in either Europe or America. Miss Hindle is not only the beau-ideal of the genus homo, but so elegantly depicts the foible fancies of the sterner sex that the audience are mystified as to her denomintion in this beau-monde of ours. Her feeble imitators sink into absolute insignificance and become shadows in the presence of Hindle's glorious brightness. We have had but one Shakspeare, one Dickens, one Milton, and today there is but one Hindle."

A REMINISCENCE.

For The Chicago Tribune.

Out on the shining sea
A fisher-boat goes dancing;
Manned by oarsmen three,
Lightly and bravely floats she
Over the waters; glancing
In the softening light of the dying day,
Lightly and bravely she floats away.

Stalwart, and ruddy, and strong
Are these sun-kissed oarsmen three—
Blithe and singing the song
They sing of the grand old sea;
Backward it floats, so thrilling and sweet,
To the watchers on shore, that pulses beat
In rhythmic measure, and faces flush
With the fervor of feeling; while down-dropping Night,
With shadows enwrapping, steal slowly from sight
The fairy barge, with its oarsmen three Singing their song of the grand old sea.

This is the song they sing
As they lift their sweeping blades;
This is the song the sea-winds bring Back to three listening maids
Watching on shore the fairy barge
As into the twilight she floats—
Praying "Our Lady" to keep in charge
Those they love, as the sweet, soft notes
Fall on each ear, so faint and low,
Yet with thrilling distinctness, so well they know
The joyous song of those boatmen three
As they ply their oars on the shining sea:

"We love thee, thou grand old sea!
Rocked on thy heaving breast,
Thy mighty voice is our lullaby—
Thy billows, our place of rest.

"We love thee, dashing spray,
Foamy, and soft, and white
As the plumage of birds that all the day
Circle and sweep in tireless flight
Above thy depths, unfettered and free
As thou in thy beauty,
Thou grand old sea!

"We love thee when storms come down,
Brooding, and dark, and wild—
When tempests threaten, when murk clouds frown—
For fear hath not the ocean-child:
O dear to him is the salt sea-foam
In peace or in storm—for 'tis his home."

So sang those oarsmen three,
Ruddy, and stalwart, and strong,
Until lost in Night's infinity
Were oarsmen, maidens, and song.

CHICAGO. SARAH LOUISE MORRIS.

The International Fisheries Exhibition.

At an influential meeting held at Willis' Rooms, London, the Prince of Wales presided, and thus briefly stated the object of the exhibition: "Ladies and gentlemen, the report of the Duke of Richmond has brought before your notice salient points and important statistics in connection with this proposed great international fisheries exhibition. You are all aware what a great success the one held at Berlin was, and I am inclined to think that, as that exhibition was so great a success, and as the population of Berlin exceeds only by a little 1,100,000, an exhibition held in this great metropolis, where we number nearly 5,000,000 inhabitants, has every chance of being successful in all respects. We are also very anxious that foreign countries should co-operate with us, and we look especially to America on all important matters with reference to fish culture, whether for inland or sea fish. I am told that the United States Commissioners reared in 1878 no less than 15,700,000 shad alone, and the United States Government voted $20,000 toward the expense of American exhibits at Berlin. I therefore hope that for our exhibition next year they will also be very liberal to us. The statistics which have been given here with regard to the enormous amount of fish taken and delivered in our great markets are, I may say, considerably under the mark, as I am told and I believe I am correct in stating, that it amounts very nearly to a million tons of fish annually taken in British waters by our fishermen, and that last year nearly 154,000 tons were delivered in Billingsgate Market. The value of the salmon fisheries in England, as some of you may be already aware, amounts to £500,000 a year. Of course in the great exhibitions of 1851 and 1862, and in the international exhibitions held on the Continent there were exhibits of everything connected with fishing; but I may say that this great exhibition is a larger development of what was shown at those exhibitions, and those who had the advantage of seeing the remarkably well arranged exhibition at Norwich last year will have formed some idea of what this exhibition will be in London. It will, however, be on a very much larger scale. I may mention, also, that it is intended not only to show everything connected with pisciculture and fishing generally, but also everything connected with lifeboats and life-saving apparatus of every kind. There is another point which has been alluded to in the report—that it is to be hoped this exhibition will not be a mere show, but that some good may accrue from it, since international discussions and lectures will be held, from which some real benefit may be derived."

A CENTENNIAL BIRTHDAY.

Five Generations Assembled to Do Honor to Mrs. Clarissa Raymond—Brief Sketch of the Old Lady's Life.

New York Times.

WILTON, Conn., April 25.—A gray-haired lady whose face, while bright and intelligent, bespoke extreme old age, sat in an easy chair in a large and hospitable-looking house on the edge of the little hamlet of Wilton today. A throng surrounded her that was composed of persons of all ages from toddling babes to white-locked men and women who looked scarcely younger than the one who was the centre of the assemblage. The old lady was Clarissa Raymond, the relict of Samuel Raymond, who departed this world sixty-six years ago, and she was celebrating the 100th anniversary of her birthday. The gathering that clung about her numbered over 100, and comprised her descendants. Including herself, five generations were represented. Among the oldest in the company were the two surviving daughters of the centenarian, Mrs. Ann Raymond, aged 77, widow of the late Samuel Raymond, of South Norwalk, Conn., and Mrs. Clarissa Comstock, aged 76, widow of the late Nathan Comstock, at whose residence the event was celebrated. The youngest were Alice Comstock, aged 7 months, and Raymond Comstock, aged 2 years and 1 month, the children of Frank Comstock, of Norwalk, Conn., a great-grandson of the centenarian. Mrs. Raymond was born in the Town of Stamford, Conn., April 25, 1782. Deodate Raymond, her brother, was the grandson of the Rev. John Davenport, who was pastor of the Stamford Congregational Church from 1693 to 1731. In Canaan, in 1804, she married Samuel Raymond and removed to Poundridge, N. Y. Soon after they went to New York City, where they resided in Hester street until 1816. Mr. Raymond died in that year and Mrs. Raymond removed to Wilton, in which township she has ever since lived. During her latter years she has resided with her daughter, Mrs. Comstock, and until a short time ago the five congregations were represented in the single household. There are living in the direct line of descent two children of Mrs. Raymond, thirteen grandchildren, nineteen great-grandchildren, and two great-great-grandchildren. In 1822 Mrs. Raymond became connected with the Wilton Congregational Church, now over 150 years old, and she still remains a member.

Mrs. Raymond received the guests in a black satin dress made sixty years ago. On her head she wore a neat cap. She was in excellent spirits and expressed great pleasure in seeing people she had not seen before, many of them, for ten and twenty years. The old lady told some of the incidents of her life in a quaint way to her interested listeners. In her girlhood only ox-carts were used, and in making journeys the people rode on horseback. When a man and his wife started on a trip the latter sat behind her husband on the horse. The first carriage ever seen in the part of the country in which she lived was procured for the use of an invalid lady. In these days it would be considered a cumbersome thing, but then it created a great deal of talk. The women folk suffered a great deal for the want of tea. When Mrs. Raymond and her husband went to New York they traveled in a wagon, and went over the old Boston road to the city. The upper part, and, in fact, all of Manhattan Island above what is now called Eighth street, was unsettled. The ground was irregular and thickly covered with trees and bushes. The business part of the city was away down on the Battery and along the docks, and Broadway down to Bowling Green was the fashionable quarter for residences. When the war of 1812 broke out the soldiers were garrisoned just above Grand street, on the East River.

When Mrs. Raymond lived in New York the city was lighted with lamps filled with fish-oil, which stood at the corners of intersecting streets. She remembered well the launch of Robert Fulton's steamboat, the Clermont, and the excitement it created. When asked what business the people of New York were mostly engaged in at the time, she said, "A great many were engaged in digging out hills." The Bowery was almost out in the country, and a favorit resort on pleasant days. Harlem was considered a long distance off. When Mrs. Raymond left New York to go to Wilton she took a packet-boat through Long Island Sound, and was a week making the journey.

Three pairs of men's cotton socks that the old lady knit in her 100th year were exhibited.

Mrs. Raymond enjoys remarkably good health. Her hearing is good and she can see to read large print without glasses. She is quite active, and is always happy to receive friends. She often piles up blocks on the floor for her great-great-grandchildren to play with. Her relatives attribute her long life to plain living, regular habits, and an even temperament.

THE JUDENHETZE.

Horrible Outrages Against Jews in Russia.

The Zaria newspaper gives an account of a shocking tragedy which occurred in the neighborhood of the Town of Loubna. On the night of March 24 three soldiers of a lancer regiment quartered in the town entered the establishment of a Jew retailer of spirits of the name of Malinoff. The hour being late, the family, consisting of nine persons, had retired to rest, with the exception of the eldest daughter, a girl of 18. The soldiers asked for fourpenny worth of "vodky," with which they were duly served by the girl. When the liquor had been consumed she asked them to retire, as the hour was so late. Her guests did not hurry themselves, but presently two of them went out. The third remained, and, approaching the bed where the owner of the establishment was lying asleep, he woke him up and demanded his money. The terrified Jew sprang up, but before he could take a single step the soldier fired two shots with his revolver, and the wretched man fell a bleeding corpse before his daughter's eyes. The screams of the girl awoke the whole family. Her mother, who was in a back room, and whom recent events had taught to expect violence and outrage, seized her two youngest children and bid one of them in an empty box, which she shut and locked, and the other under a couch. She then tried herself to escape through the window, but the soldiers were on the lookout, and, rushing after her, they caught her and beat her until she fell senseless, and, as they supposed, dead. Then the murderers returned to the house. There they found two boys, aged 14 and 15, standing awestruck and affrighted over their slaughtered father.

The barbarians were unmoved by this pitiful sight, and the boys speedily shared the fate of their parent and fell dying on his corpse. Now the murderers began to search the house, and soon discovered the child whom the mother had concealed in the empty trunk. This unfortunate infant they kicked to death with their spurs. Having thus disposed of the whole family, except the eldest daughter, the ruffians next turned their attention to her, and, under threats of the most fearful consequences should she refuse, they bid her inform them where her father's money was to be found. The trembling girl disclosed the hiding-place of the little store which had been saved as the result of the industry and thrift of the family, and forty rubles and seven silver spoons became the booty of the assassins. It might have been supposed their evil passions would have been satisfied with the crimes already committed, but the unfortunate girl soon found that such was not the case. The ruffians indeed spared her life, but they brutally outraged her before leaving the house. Having thus wreaked their will on all the members of the family they at last departed.

The worst feature in the whole affair has, however, yet to be related, and will show how little mercy the Jews can expect, even from those whose duties should specially teach them compassion. On leaving the scene of their atrocities the soldiers discovered that the mother of the family, whom they had left for dead, had recovered consciousness, and was endeavoring to get away to seek assistance in the neighborhood. They fired at her with their revolvers, and succeeded in wounding her, but she nevertheless struggled on and got out of their reach. The wretched woman, bleeding and covered with wounds and clothed only in the night-dress in which she was sleeping when the attack commenced, sought the protection of a monk who lived close by. The monk got up on hearing her cries, but when he opened his door and discovered that it was "only a Jewess" that sought his protection he refused assistance or refuge, and the people of the neighboring village the next morning found the wretched woman lying all but naked, senseless and dying in the roadway.

The Dog's Eyes Were Best.

A gentleman, accompanied by a favorit dog, visited the studio of a rising artist. There was a picture on the easel, and the dog began to bark furiously at it.

"Nature may be relied upon, after all," said the gentleman. "The best evidence of the faithfulness with which you have painted that dog in the background is the earnestness with which my dog barks at him."

"But that isn't a dog," said the artist, flushing; "it is a cow."

The gentleman was nonplussed for a moment, but he quickly replied, "Well, the dog's eyes are better than mine; he never did like cows."

Although many are predisposed to lung troubles from birth, yet even such may escape consumption or other pulmonary or bronchial disease if due care and watchfulness be observed, and all exciting causes are promptly treated as they arise. It is in these cases Dr. Jayne's Expectorant exercises its most beneficial effects, and has produced the largest proportion of its cures. Besides promptly removing coughs and colds, which, when left to themselves, are the immediate cause of tuberculous development, this standard remedy allays any inflammation which may exist, and by promoting easy expectoration cleanses the lungs of the substances which clog them up and which rapidly destroy when suffered to remain.

THE WHISKY EVIL.

What the Citizens' League Has Done Since the First of the Year.

List of Saloonkeepers Mulcted for Violating the Law in Regard to Minors.

Mayor Harrison's Lame Excuse for Not Revoking More Licenses.

THE TRIBUNE this morning presents some interesting, though distressing, facts brought to the surface by the agents of the Citizens' League for the purpose of proving the charge made against Mayor Harrison that he is so under the influence of saloonkeepers, who furnish Democratic votes, that, except in rare instances, he dare not revoke a license, although scarcely a day passes that one or more of the keepers of the dives which are corrupting the youth of the city are not convicted of violations of the law. Since the first of this year about 160 saloonkeepers in all parts of the city have been arrested for ignoring the laws relating to their business. In one-third of the cases the evidence attainable was not conclusive, the witnesses being run off or induced to stay away from the Police Court, but in seventy-six cases the offenders were convicted and fined; in twenty-four they were held over to the Criminal Court; in four cases fines were imposed and the defendants held over; two forfeited their bonds, and the charges are still pending against eleven.

The fact that three officers—one in each division—caused the arrest of 160 saloonkeepers in a little over three months shows the necessity for a more vigorous enforcement of the law, for probably not one in five of the guilty ones were caught. The police ignore the saloons altogether, never going into one except when they want a drink or to arrest a murderer or quell a disturbance which the barkeeper cannot put down. But extended comment is unnecessary, the subjoined tables speak for themselves, and indicate that Mayor Harrison is not doing his full duty. He didn't believe public gambling could be suppressed, but it has been. He doesn't believe that saloonkeepers can be kept within the law, and is not disposed to help the Citizens' League to that end by revoking licenses. Probably, as in gaming, he is waiting for an expression of public opinion. If he can only be assured that it is the popular thing to do, he will come to the conclusion that the low whisky-shops, whose patrons are chiefly boys, can be rooted out, and will then commence the good work.

The following are the tables, the figures showing the fines imposed, the * indicating that the parties were convicted by a jury, C C meaning that the cases are pending in the Criminal Court, F that the bonds were forfeited, and P that the parties are awaiting a hearing in the Police Court.

MAYOR HARRISON INTERVIEWED.

The Mayor was asked to explain why it was that he was not revoking more saloon licenses on account of the labors of the Citizens' League, and his reply was that he had made revocations in four out of every five cases brought to his notice, whether by the league or individuals. He could not take cognizance of newspaper reports as to the arrest and conviction of offenders, but expected the complaints to be made direct to him, and when they had been so made he claimed that he had never failed to do his duty.

COOPERATION PROMISED.

At a meeting of the Central Association of Saloonkeepers Friday afternoon, after the transaction of some routine business, a resolution was adopted authorizing the Secretary to inform the Citizens' League that the Saloonkeepers' Association stood ready to coöperate with that body in its efforts for the suppression of low-class saloons and doggeries, where boys and girls are roped in and made drunk.

HIS COAT.

How Two Dutiful Sons Were Sadly Thwarted by a Father's Speculation.

Philadelphia Times.

A good deal of amusement has been caused in dry-goods trade circles during the past few days by the leaking out of a little story at the expense of two young gentlemen who are widely and favorably known in the trade. The father of these young men is a prominent Market street merchant, noted for his large wealth, shrewd business ability, and great economy, particularly in the matter of wearing apparel. The sons, who are models of elegance and taste in dress, have for a long time borne a particular antipathy to a certain venerable coat which has clung to their respected parent for many years, and often tried by persuasion to induce him to sell it to the rag-man and buy a new one, but the old gentleman's invariable reply was: "You poys shpend money enough for clothes for one family. Dis goat is good enough for me." At length, knowing their father's fondness for a bargain, they thought of a ruse by which to induce him to lay off the old garment and get a new one. Taking the coat which the father had worn they went to their tailor and instructed him to take it as a pattern as to size and to fit and make the finest coat he could. "We will," said one of them, "get father down here on some pretense or other and then you must sell him that coat. No matter what he offers, you take it, and we'll pay you the balance." In due time the sons received word that the coat was finished—price $80. The next morning at breakfast the eldest son casually remarked: "Father, you will be going near the tailor's today, and I wish you would stop and tell him to be sure and send home my new coat today, for I have a party to attend to tonight."

"Very vell, my son, I vill do so, but I don't see what you poys vant with so many goats."

The old gentleman delivered his message, and the tailor's opportunity had come. Fingering the venerable garment, he remarked, persuasively: "You ought to have a new coat. It is a shame for a rich man like you to wear such an old garment as that."

"Tank you very much; but this goat is good enough for me."

"I have got something," persisted the tailor, "that I believe will fit you, and it is the greatest bargain that you ever heard of. I made it for a customer, but it was a misfit. The price of that coat," said the tailor, producing the garment, "is $80, but it won't fit the man I made it for, and I'll let you have it for next to nothing. Try it on."

The coat was tried on, and proved a perfect fit.

"You'll never get such a bargain again if you live a hundred years," said the tailor. "You may have that coat for $40."

"I'll giff you twenty-five," said the old merchant, who knew cloth when he saw it.

"Take it."

Carrying his old coat in a bundle, the purchaser went out arrayed in the $80 coat.

At supper that night he appeared in the familiar old coat and in excellent good humor. To his sons he said: "I made a nice little ting today. Ven I vas at the tailor's I bought a goat—a nice, fine goat. The price vas $80, but I got it for $25. I put it on and had not gone a square pefore I met a friend. He noticed my new goat and sphoke about it, and I told him about how I got it so sheap. He offered me $30 for the goat and I took it—made $5 in fife minutes."

"Yes," said the sons, dolefully, in chorus, "you've made $5, and we have lost $45." Then they explained. "My gracious! that is pad," said the old man, when he comprehended the situation; "but let dis be a lesson to you, my shildren. Never dry to deceive your fader."

DIVORCE.

Allegation that a Wife Was Driven Crazy by Ill-Treatment.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 29.—Proceedings were commenced here today to set aside a judgment of divorce which was recently granted Gustav G. Loeffler, a prominent West Side citizen. The case is of general interest. Mrs. Loeffler is insane, and he applied for a divorce under the old law of this State, which made incurable insanity a sufficient ground for divorcement. This divorce was obtained Feb. 13, before the bill repealing the law had been passed by the Legislature. For some reason the guardian of the insane woman did not appear to answer. The attorneys claim, in the papers filed today, that the woman is not incurably insane; that she was driven to her present condition by her husband's cruelty, and that there were irregularities in the manner in which the divorce was granted. There is a fair prospect that the decree will be set aside.

Trouble Between Two Actors of the Late "New Magdalen" Company.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

CLEVELAND, O., April 29.—Lillian Cleaves, the actress, today applied for divorce from her husband, Richard Foote. The petition says Foote is intemperate and habitually of violent temper, and that he has frequently been extremely cruel to Lillian. The "New Magdalen" company has been disbanded.

Bidding for the Irish Vote Just as It Is in the United States.

Special Dispatch to The Chicago Tribune.

OTTAWA, April 25.—One of the most noticeable features of the debate on the Irish resolutions was that each speaker seemed to think it incumbent on him to declare that he was Irish, or at least part Irish. Mr. Costigan started the ball by speaking of himself as an Irishman, and Mr. Blake followed by showing that he was the descendant of a grandfather who was the rector of an Irish church, and a descendant on the mother's side of one who was slain in conflict with the insurgents. Sir John Macdonald, who is the most cosmopolitan man in the world, if you can take his own word for it, having been born in half a dozen different places at the same time, declared that "he, too, Mr. Speaker, had Celtic blood running in his veins," which is the next thing to being Irish. Mr. Patterson, of Essex, is Irish all through, not merely on one side but on both sides. Sir Richard Cartwright is also Irish, although nobody would ever have suspected it. He capped the climax by assuring the House that he was long and intimately connected with Ireland on his mother's side. There is no reasonable doubt that if the discussion had been prolonged every man in the House would have been found to have Irish blood running in his veins. Even the Scotch members, if scratched long enough, might have been found to be Irish underneath. The general elections are supposed to be near at hand, and both political parties are courting the Irish vote.

Sketch of a Hindoo Lawyer.

From the Memoirs of the late Hon. Justice Onocool Chunder Mookerjee.

The judgeship was a desideratum to him. The hope which he so long hatched at last yielded him what he had hankered after, and in seven-league boots. True hope is swift and flies with swallows' wings, and he might have justly said: Veni, vidi, vici! The law study to which he had devoted so long his midnight hours, with indefatigable ardor and the zeal of a martyr, yielded him fruits most sacchariferous and wished for—position, respect, and wealth. Since he joined the native bar down ad finem of his career as a pleader, he had won a uniform way of pleading. He made no gairish of words, never made his sentences long, where he could express his thoughts in small ones. He never made his sentences periphrastic when he could do it in an easy way. He was an eloquent speaker, but made no raree-show of it. Never he counterchanged strong words with the pleaders or barristers of the other party. In defeating or conducting a case his temper was never incalescent and hazy. He well understood the interest of his client, and never ceased to tussel for it until he was flushed with success, or until the shafts of his arguments made his quiver void. He was never seen to illude or trespass upon the time of court with fiddle-faddle arguments to prove his wits going a wool-gathering, but what he said was nude truth, based upon jus civile, lex non scripta, lex scripta, etc., and relative to his case and in homogeneity to the subject-matter he discussed, and always true to the points he argued. He made no quotation having no bearing whatever to his case, but cited such acts, clauses, and precedents that have a direct affinity to his case or the subject-matter of his argument. By the bye, I should not here omit to mention that he had one peculiarity in his pleadings which I have observed very minutely. Having first expounded before the Court the anatomy of his case, he then launched out on the relative position of his client with that of the other, pointing out the quiproquo or bolstering up the decision of the lower court with his sapience, and legal acumen, and cognoscence, waiting with quietude to see which side the Court takes in favorable consideration, knuckling to the arguments of the Court, and then inducing it gradually to his favor, giving thereby no offense to the Court. Justice Mookerjee very well understood the boot of his client, for which he would carry a logomachy, as if his wheel of fortune depended upon it, or even more than that. He was seen sometimes to argue a case continually for many a day, which more than amply indemnified the remuneration given to him; for this reason he was the only wished-for pleader or the magnet for the last five years of his stay in the native bar of the High Court. He understood money very well, and at the same time he knew how to bring grist to the mill.

MARINE NEWS.

Fairly Active Demand Yesterday for Grain-Carriers for the Lower Lakes.

Coal Freights from Buffalo to This Port and Milwaukee Very Firm.

Dock and Other Notes—Vessels Passed Port Huron—Vessel Charters—Around the Lakes—Port List.

Lake Freights.

There was a fairly active demand yesterday on the part of shippers for grain-vessels to go to lower lake ports, and rates were firm at 2¼ cents a bushel on corn to Buffalo. There is no surplus of grain-carriers in the port at the present time. There was some demand for vessels to carry grain to Canadian ports, but vessels suitable for that trade are scarce at present. One sail vessel was chartered for a cargo of corn to Midland at 1¾ cents a bushel free of elevation. The following were yesterday's engagements:

To Buffalo.	Bushels.
Propeller John Pridgeon Jr., corn	58,000
Propeller Colorado, corn	50,000
Propeller Avon, wheat	40,000
To Erie.
Propeller Business, corn	50,000
Propeller Clarion, corn	60,000
Schooner Groton, corn	24,000
To Midland.
Schooner Queen of the Lakes, corn	18,000
Total capacity	300,000

There was some inquiry for lumber carriers yesterday by shippers, and three or four vessels were chartered to bring lumber from Muskegon at $1.37½ per 1,000 feet, though most shippers were unwilling to pay over $1.25 for cargoes from that point. Vesselmen generally are firm in the demand for the former rate, claiming that the inside figures will leave them no profit after paying expenses. Rates continue as follows:

From Grand Haven	$ 1.37½
From Muskegon	1.25@1.37½
From White Lake	1.37½
From Pentwater	1.62½
From Ludington	1.62½
From Manistee	1.75
From Bay City	2.00@2.25
From Cheboygan	2.00
From Black River	1.75
From Ashland	3.25@3.50
From Ontonagon	2.25@3.50

There was a little inquiry for vessels to bring ties and posts to this port, and one or two vessels were chartered at the subjoined figures:

	Cedar ties.	Hemlock and oak ties.	Cedar posts.
From Sturgeon Bay	†6½	....	4
From Points in Green Bay	*7	....	‡4½
From East Shore (opposit)	....	†5½	....
From Georgian Bay	8½	....	....
From White Lake	....	†10	....
From Wiarton	8	....	....

*Rafted, 7½ cents. ‡Free on board. †On deck.

No charters to carry iron ore were reported yesterday. Rates continue nominally as follows:

From Marquette to Lake Erie ports	$1.25@1.35
From Escanaba to Lake Erie ports	1.00@1.05
From Escanaba to Chicago	90@ 95
From Marquette to Chicago	1.15@1.20

Coal freights at Buffalo yesterday to this port and Milwaukee were very strong, and the tendency was in favor of higher rates. The quoted rates are:

From Buffalo to Chicago	$ 60@ 65
From Toledo to Chicago	1.00
From Cleveland to Chicago	75
From Erie to Chicago	75
From Buffalo to Milwaukee	65@ 70
From Toledo to Milwaukee	1.00
From Cleveland to Milwaukee	75
From Erie to Milwaukee	75
From Buffalo to Racine	80@ 85

Dock and Other Notes.

P. N. Johannen has been appointed master of the schooner Mary B. Hale, vice J. W. Sahlig.

Towing on the river was not very brisk yesterday, several of the tugs getting "skunked" for tows.

Capt. "Bill" Chamberlain's fine boat Business went to a South Branch elevator yesterday evening to load.

Advices from Escanaba represent the weather as extremely bad, and the loading of vessels with ore progressing very slowly.

The capsized schooner O. Shaw was righted yesterday in the Government basin, and will today be towed to a dry-dock for repairs.

Several of the piles at Division street bridge had to be pulled out yesterday before the big propeller City of Rome could get alongside of the dock.

The yacht Idler was towed down to the Government basin yesterday from Channon & Co.'s derrick up the North Branch, where she had a new foremast put in.

The schooner Groton, Capt. Ed. Lohr, left for Erie last evening loaded with corn, her first trip this season. The schooner Sunrise also left for the same port on her first trip.

The schooners Watts Sherman and Kate Darley and tug Thomas Hood went into the docks of the Chicago Dry-Dock Company yesterday to stop leaks and for other repairs.

Capt. Ed Napier arrived from Grand Haven yesterday. He still has to use a crutch, the result of his injuries while helping to put the boiler into his new boat built at that port.

The tug Success, of the Union Tug Line, which was rebuilt this winter, made a trial trip yesterday and performed handsomely. Capt. John Hardy commands her, and a better tugman is not to be found on the river.

The dead body of a man was found floating in the river at Twenty-second street bridge yesterday, which, it is believed, is the remains of Capt. Thomas Nelson, Master of the schooner Ironsides, who mysteriously disappeared some three weeks ago. The body answers the description of Capt. Nelson, being short in stature, black hair and mustache, and slightly bowlegged. Two bullet-holes were found in the back, which leads to the conclusion that the man was first shot and killed and then thrown into the river. Several persons who knew Capt. Nelson personally viewed the remains, and were under the impression that the body was his, but were not positive, as the features were very much bloated.

The schooner Resumption had all her mizzen rigging carried away yesterday at Wells street bridge. The schooner had just passed through the draw and the bridge was being closed after her. The bridgetender miscalculated the speed the vessel was making and swung his bridge too rapidly. The result was that the end of the bridge caught in the mizzen rigging and carried it away. There was some lively scrambling on board the Resumption when the accident happened. The Captain, who was standing on the cabin at the time, jumped forward to the deck for dear life, while the man at the wheel made a dive down into the cabin through the door. In fact, there was more agility displayed by those on the after part of the schooner than is seen in a first-class circus by the trained acrobats. Fortunately the mizzenmast did not come down, though for a moment it swayed like a tree in a heavy wind-storm.

Coal freights to Chicago and Milwaukee are very strong and tending upward. Detroit and Toledo rates are demoralized. To the former port 30 cents was paid today, and to Toledo only 25 cents is offered. Engagements—Schooner G. S. Hazard, coal to Milwaukee at 70 cents; schooner D. G. Fort, coal to Racine at 80 cents; schooner William Shupe, coal to Detroit at 30 cents; schooners Rival and Mamie Belle, coal to Sandusky at 30 cents.

Canal freights weak at 4¾ cents on corn and 5¾ cents on wheat.

The big iron steamer Onoko arrived at 11:50 this morning with wheat from Chicago. She left there last Tuesday at 4:20 in the afternoon, making her time down three days and nineteen and a half hours. The general opinion of our vesselmen is that she is much more homely than a large carrier need be. She is unloading at Niagara B elevator. She will probably carry coal up from Cleveland.

Gambetta Since His Fall.

Coming from the Chamber the other day (writes a Paris correspondent of the New York Evening Post), I saw M. Gambetta on the bridge opposit the Palais Bourbon, urging his portly person against a wind which churned the Seine into a whirlpool, and made most pedestrians clutch their hats despairingly. The great man has grown old with almost alarming rapidity, but not since his fall. On the contrary, it is only from the moment of his departure from power that his eye has brightened and his step has grown comparatively light. His face is flushed and his eyes are sunken, not, as a reliable informant who was with me when he passed told me, because of dissipation, but because of overwork. Never man toiled as Gambetta toiled for twelve or fourteen weeks previous to his resignation. His doctor gave him the choice to die or to stop work, and before he was compelled to admit publicly that his physical energies were flagging came the political crisis which gave him repose. He went down to the Chamber on the day that I saw him with the air of a man who still had an important place there; and I observed that hats were doffed on all sides as he went along. Wicked De Blowitz, the Paris correspondent of the London Times, says that Gambetta still keeps the tricolored cockade, which belongs to the Prime Minister's equipage, upon his coachman's hat, which, if true, might be considered as an indication of great expectations. Gambetta is more frequently seen in public—at the theatre, in society—now that the strain of his labor is relaxed. He is now visible in a box at the Français, now heard of at a dinner party where the company is brilliant and gay. "He is not a man of the world," once said Gen. Galliffet of him; "he cannot boast of tenue, but he can say a neat thing; from his corner of a sofa after dinner he sometimes sends forth a flight of witty and caustic sayings sure to be long remembered." Every one who has heard him in the tribune knows what a remarkable faculty he possesses for crushing an adversary with a sharp retort, which stings for many days.

Spinner and Blaine.

Gen. Spinner, ex-Treasurer of the United States, in a recent conversation at his Florida home said:

"I used to know Blaine when he first came to Congress. We boarded at the same house, and our families dined together. Some of my friends about that time introduced a bill into Congress to increase my salary as Treasurer. Mr. Blaine took occasion to speak on the bill, and make some very grossly unjust remarks about me. I was a good deal surprised, and after that I did not notice him or recognize him in any way. Of course it was rather embarrassing for our families. One day standing in the hall with an acquaintance, Blaine passed, and the gentleman I was talking with introduced us. I offered no recognition, and the gentleman said: 'I thought you knew Blaine.' 'I do,' said I, 'and that's why I didn't speak to him.' Some time after that Blaine and I met, and he came up to me holding out both his hands. He said: 'General, this thing has been going on long enough. I am sorry I said what I did about you, and I should not have said it. I did not know you then.' 'Well,' said I, 'that is just why you should not have said it.' But he asked my forgiveness and we made friends, and have been personal friends ever since. That is just the difference between Blaine and Conkling. Blaine can forgive a man he has injured, but Conkling cannot."

The Secret of Genius.

"They talk," said Tom Marshall, the brilliant lawyer and orator, to an intimate friend, "of my astonishing burst of eloquence, and doubtless imagine it is my genius bubbling over. It is nothing of the sort. I'll tell you how I do it: I select a subject, and study it from the ground up. When I have mastered it fully I write a speech on it. Then I take a walk, and come back, and revise and correct. In a few days I subject it to another pruning, and then recopy it. Next I add the finishing touches, round it off with graceful periods, and commit it to memory. Then I speak it in the field, on my father's lawn, and before my mirror, until gesture and delivery are perfect. It sometimes takes me six weeks or two months to get up a speech. When I have one prepared I come to town. I generally select my own subject. I speak my piece. It astonishes the people, as I intend it shall, and they go away, marveling at my power of oratory. They call it genius, but it is the hardest kind of work."

Reckless Use of Hypodermic Injections.

London Lancet.

A recent painful case of death caused by a hypodermic injection of morphia directs attention afresh to the dangers of resorting to this most perilous mode of administering drugs designed to relieve pain. The public should be warned against the practice of employing remedies hypodermically. So formidable a "remedy" should on no account be used except under medical advice, and when deemed necessary it ought to be given by practitioners. We have repeatedly urged the profession to discountenance the recourse to injections under the skin, which is becoming general. It is a practice of extreme hazard, and we are of opinion that surgical instrument makers should refuse to sell the requisit apparatus to lay persons, and that medical men should forbid their use.

A NATIONAL SHAME.

Privileges to the Assasin in the Washington Jail.

Scenes That Sicken Patriotism and Shame Decency.

Guiteau's Treatment, and Punishment for Petty Crimes, Compared.

Correspondence Cincinnati Commercial.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22.—"Will you go with us to see the assasin?" That was the question heard yesterday, and to which was given the following answer: "Not I; to be sure I do not weigh much, but I refuse to add one atom to the Nation's disgrace." However, curiosity was strong enough with the party to outweigh their patriotic feelings and they went. The stories they had to relate when they returned were almost beyond belief. They related how luxurious the bed appeared; how well the wretch was dressed; that he had two cells; that he wrote and that he talked. He handed out his face, that the rays of the sun somehow or other had consented to put on paper, and offered these reproductions for sale as though he had been the hero of a hundred great battles, or a discoverer of some boon to humanity.

BUSINESS SPLENDID.

He had asked John Rogers and Miss Minnie Palmer, of those who had gone there, how their business was, and had said that his was splendid; that he had made as much as $30 in one day. He had also, when he was told a reporter was coming in, fallen to abusing the papers; he had cursed and howled; he had ranted up and down with the gesticulations and the tread of an innocent and abused man, whom the venal press had been persuaded to traduce.

It seemed almost too much to realize that such disgraceful and awful things were permitted. At last the spirit of newspaper enterprise awoke, and as though about to take a terrible dose of physic that the doctor had ordered, the undersigned consented to go to the jail to see the wretch who too long has infected the air of Washington with his presence.

We made a jolly carriage party, and in it was a little boy whose judgment we all wanted to learn when he had seen the murderer of the great President. The unerring instincts of the child were not to be deceived. There was little of a formidable air about the outside of the jail. It stands on perfectly level ground, and a man could make good time between the outer door and the water's edge. The outside door opened promptly to a light ring, and we were ushered into a low, long room, lighted by four broad windows; the ceiling was painted a cream-color and the walls a light green; on one window were some plants, and they gave an inhabited, rather comfortable look to this entrance to "the dungeon cells."

A REGISTER.

A desk and some chairs were the pieces of furniture, but a large round table was the one of special interest there. On it rested a register, and for what purpose, think you, good men and women of America? Why, it pleased the honored and distinguished prisoner that there should be a register for his visitors! He desires to read and ponder over the names of those who have flocked to see him; to see his gory hand writing the flaring letters of his name on spotless paper, to hear him curse and rave against those writers who are getting nauseated with the display that daily goes on in the Washington Jail.

It is needless to say, perhaps, that our party did not inscribe their names. In one of the chairs, and smoking a fair cigar, sat a Sergeant; he was more preoccupied than polite, because he sat there smoking with his cap on. Perhaps it was more becoming, or, possibly, being on duty, he was obliged to be under cover. The little boy was audacious enough to ask him point blank where his soldiers were, to which he replied that they were on the top of the house—taking observations of the surrounding country, no doubt.

There was another person in the room, and he was a quiet, pleasant-looking man with a low voice and apologetic ways, who seemed to look with a not too favorable eye on all that was going on.

We had time to look about us, for we were the first of a squad that had to be gathered before the Warden or Assistant Warden would conduct us in to the assasin's reception.

GOING IN.

By the time that everything in the room had metaphorically been taken in, we were allowed to pass through a door directly opposit the front door, and only a few feet from it, across the narrow portion of the parallelogram. It ought here to be said that, through the kind words of introduction of a friend, the Assistant Warden, whose name must be given as Mr. Russ, learned that a horrid writing woman was in the party; he turned quickly and said:

"You can see him, but you must not talk to him; we allow no newspaper people to interview him."

This correspondent of the Commercial was disappointed; she had had the honor of interviewing some distinguished and charming people, and it, therefore, really seemed too bad that she could not have the chance of talking to the man in the cell.

"What a queer-looking place!"

The words came almost at once from Mr. Harry Kline and his wife, as well as the writer, as the door referred to was at last opened. We were close to the Warden, and somehow had made up our minds to keep close to him. There was a large open space, well lighted and well ventilated, although shut in on two sides by high brick walls, at whose sides seemed to be clinging on an iron staircase. "What is this place?" was asked. "Oh," said the Warden, "it is for ventilation"; then seeing the star of the single policeman at a sort of gate, he said: "It is the guard-room; that is what it is called."

THE ASSASIN'S CELL.

It seemed to be so by courtesy only, for save a rather sleepy, ancient-looking sort of a good-natured policeman there was not a sign of any one whose business appeared to be that of guarding the jail. We passed through a gateway; I supposed, of course, that we would arrive at another place where tickets would be issued, or that we would be counted, at least; but no; through one grated door, the first one we came to, was a clean, well-lighted cell; it was, being nearest the large ventilating (or guard) room, well ventilated, was a bed covered in bright green; it looked springy and well covered; that was hard enough to have to look at when by contrast there arose before the mind the stretched-out cot of the noble sufferer, who could find no bed that would ease his racking frame; no cover that would keep away the chill of death from the great noble heart. That was bad enough, let it be repeated, but what next did we see? People with a sense of justice in your hearts! I know not what effect words may have; it seems they have perhaps lost their power when in the printed columns of a newspaper, but could you but see with your eyes, could you but hear with your ears, then indeed would your blood chill in your veins, to turn to the boiling point of revenge at the thought of the man we saw today. He was sitting at his table. He was evidently getting ready another lot of photographs. He looked up from his well-furnished table, and then he took up a newspaper for a moment as though he desired to show that he was not quite ready to receive his guests. Then he got up and came to the grating; he looked out with a self-satisfied smile on his sleek, repulsive face; he put out his hand, full of photographs, and then he said:

"These photographs with autographs are $1; those without the autograph are 75 cents. I will sell an autograph alone for 25 cents."

"Great Heavens!" was softly said to the Warden as the photographs went the rounds of a number of the twenty or more people in front of the cell, "why is he allowed to do that sort of thing?" "Oh, to let him make money." "Make money? and pray why should he be allowed to make money?" "Why not," said the Warden, "he has $1,500 in bank." "Well, if he is to be hung in June what good will it do him; what is to become of the money?" "Oh, well," said the Warden, "you should not object to the poor fellow making money."

WOMEN VS. MEN.

It has sometimes been said that women encourage this infamy more than the men. Today, with the large crowd in front of the cell, it was not the case. There were almost an equal number of women, and on all sides one could distinctly hear, as the assasin stepped back in his cell, "Now don't you buy anything; don't you disgrace yourself," and those remarks came from the women. Several men put their hands in their pockets and their wives stopped them, and soon all the photographs were handed in through the bars. At that instant a conversation between two persons back of our party and those furthest in the corridor became quite animated; we turned round, and saw a very pretty woman in mourning standing before a tall man and trying to keep his hands out of his pockets: "Now don't you encourage anything of the kind; put your money away, you shall not spend it that way." "That's right; don't you let him add anything to the country's disgrace," was said by way of encouragement by the writer.

While talking I noticed the Warden stepped up to the bars and whispered to the murderer of the President, and the wretch, who had started in again on his Judas Iscariot sale, stopped short, and, putting his hat on his head, never again opened his lips. Then the Warden turned his attention to the lady in black and the tall man who, like Paul, was almost persuaded to put his money back into his pocket, and this Assistant Warden said to this tall man and in a tone loud enough for all the twenty or more people to hear: "So you let the women run you, do you?" The taunt was too much; the tall man answered, "No; I don't allow anybody to run me. I run myself. Here, give me an autograph; put it on this piece of paper."

The lady's face colored up, and she exclaimed:

"Well, it is plain to be seen you are not an American."

They were English travelers, but she had been but once to the jail, and had not heard the Assistant Warden tell that the high-toned murderer and vender in autographs was worth $1,500 more than when he entered his cell.

THE INDIGNANT WARDEN.

Then some of us became unmanageable. We said: "Where are the other prisoners kept? We want to see the kind of cells you put common people in; those who have committed petit larceny; do you give them two rooms, a table, a handsome cover for the bed? Do you have them supplied with the papers? We want to see some other prisoners; we want to go through this jail."

Then the Assistant Warden's face colored up. He looked as though he would have enjoyed turning the key of one of the vacant cells, and with a small woman on the inside. He put out his hands, like a person about to shoo away a lot of troublesome hens; he grew voluble all of a sudden. "There are no more prisoners in this hall. You can't see any others. There are no more to be seen. You must go out of this gate at once; there are a great many waiting to come in. You must give them room; you must go; you can't see anything more."

Then there were other tongues loosened, all of a sudden, too. As our party went out of the gate the sentences were fired at him fast: "There were friends of ours here yesterday who saw other prisoners; we mean to see them too. We are going through this jail, and we mean to see all that is in it, and we are not going away till we do."

As we went out we mustered up courage enough to look around at the thing behind the bars. He was watching keenly the crowd going out, and beneath his hat rim one could see the awakened interest on that horrible face.

OBLIGING SERGEANT.

We followed the English couple out the gate, and saw them talking to the Sergeant, who had been silently smoking in the ante-room. He was another sort of person. He became attentive, offered to show us all that we wanted to see. There was a sympathetic woman, whose face was crimson with indignation and shame, and she was telling her husband how disgusted she was; the Englishman had cooled down, and said he was going to send the autograph as a curiosity over to England; what a curiosity it will be, indeed. We were holding a sort of international indignation meeting when Harry Kline called out to come and look at the scaffold, and to see where other prisoners were put. We crossed the great open space and went to a long, outside glass—inclosed hall, with grated windows like black paneled lines on the red bricks, in countless numbers, looking down. At the end was the rather too hastily erected scaffold. It was once said that it was put up for the assasin. Now it is said that it has been there for some time. It becomes a sort of which is it, if not a veritable "what is it."

Then we saw, or rather knew, they were there because we heard voices of a lot of woolly heads at these windows.

"What you in for?" called out Harry: "what you in for?"

"Petit larceny, massa, petit larceny. All on us is in for petit larceny; all on us on dis side ob de jail. Give us a dime for some tobaccy, won't you, massa?" These were the sentences that came from the grated windows. The dime was handed in one of the lower windows, and then it was asked: "What you got in your cell?"

"Nuffin, nuffin, nuffin, massa; nuffin, only the bed."

UP-STAIRS.

We left the corridor with the ghastly at one end, and we crossed to the door where we had entered; we went up a long flight of stairs, and a crowd before the door told the horrible story that curiosity to see another creature who had murdered was what had gathered the people there; it was to see the negro woman who had killed to little children. She was in the building above the reception or ante-room; her door was open, and there was nothing between the wretched creature, in torn and tattered dress, and those outside.

The staircase was but a few feet grom her. We wandered away and went up another flight of stairs. There was a door partly open; we pushed it and found a bath-room. There was another, whose knob we turned; it likewise opened, and we found three negro women. They chatted and laughed; they too wanted some tobaccy, and they too got a dime.

We went down in time to go to the ground floor with the crowd that had tired of looking at the woman murderer of children, and we found the obliging Sergeant leading the crowd.

The ante-room seemed to have been occupied in our absence by the mild-faced man, who was kept busy opening and shutting the front door for visitors. We peeped across the great space, and the policeman was there looking more sleepy than before; there seemed others about, but no one could tell whether they formed the guard of honor for the distinguished prisoner selling his photographs.

A WOMAN OF AMERICA.

It was during our crossing the open space from looking at the scaffold and before mounting the front stairway that one of the ladies before mentioned was talking again to her husband and she was frank enough to tell him that if that scaffold was too weak to hold the assasin, and if the men of the country had not nerve and patriotism enough to hang him, the women of the country would themselves weave the cord for his neck, and that if they had conducted the business he would have swung long ago.

When again in the ante-room, the party party went to look at some ropes. The Englishman was quite curious over them and the models of scaffolds. The Assistant Warden was at his desk. His manner had changed. He was mildly and politely argumentative, but it was too late; we were not to be convinced that it was an honor to the country that the murderer of a President of the United States, or the murderer of any other man, should live like a nabob, dress like a gentlemen, be entertained and féted, and—make $1,500 selling his horrible face.

FACTS AND THEORIES.

When once out again in the open air we breathed again more freely. We then began to compare notes, and when all together later on we made some more comparisons, and these are they; the public can take them at their worth, can believe or reject them; we give facts, then we give theories. First of all, John Rogers, who has traveled twice around the world, and who makes a study of faces and of people, says that the assassin of the President talked to him and Miss Minnie Palmer in a cool, sensible manner about the dramatic profession, and how the business connected with it ought to be conducted; he was not in the least like an insane person; but when he heard a newspaper man was coming he indulged in a very clever bit of acting, and rolled his eyes and distorted his face like a first-class imitator of a mad man.

Rogers says further that he is willing to bet $1,000 that the assasin will never be hanged, and that there is not the slightest idea on the part of those in charge of him that the sentence for next June will ever be carried into execution.

It was suggested that the wearing of his hat in the cell had a bad look; that should by any way the slats of his door be broken, he could walk out unnoticed in the crowd that is hurried past the solitary policeman, whose lot is not a happy one. Then, surrounded by men taller than he, by women with broad hats and big bonnets, how is the man who keeps the door to know him so well in a large crowd, for be it known to the American people, that it is Sergt. Mason who wears a felon's suit. Garfield's murderer is dressed by the most fashionable tailor, and his hair is of ordinary length.

If one door of the cells of the prison is open, it is not impossible that a number of locks might be broken, and in the hurry of the guards to get again those arrested for petit larceny, the well dressed gentleman with the photograph gallery in his private parlor, and the newspapers in his bed-room might be overlooked. The American people outside of Washington are not as indifferent as a large circle here appears to be growing. There are a few, however, who whisper terrible things under their breath, things so terrible that it makes one hate the gorgeous domes and white pillars of some of the great buildings that are the pride of this beautiful capital of this country.

There seems now to come from that jail a shadow that darkens their brightness, that makes the crimson bars of our flag grow black with shame, that sets the stars in a sea of blood, and blots out forever the heaven's own blue; the shadow seems to darken even the White House.

MIDGET.

The Highest Building in Europe.

Builder.

Hitherto the Hospice of the Great St. Bernard, which stands 8,200 feet above the level of the sea, has enjoyed the distinction of being the most elevated inhabited building in Europe. This honor it can now no longer claim. During the past year the city authorities of Catania, in Sicily, have caused to be erected near the summit of the great volcano, Mount Etna, an astronomical observatory which stands 2,943 metres above the sea level, or fully 1,000 feet higher than the Hospice of St. Bernard. The structure is nine metres in hight, and covers an area of 200 square metres. It consists of an upper and lower story, and is built in a circular form. In the lower story there rises a massive pillar, upon which is placed the great refracting telescope. The lower story is divided into a dining-room, kitchen, and store-rooms. In the upper story there are three bedrooms, intended for the accommodation of astronomers and tourists visiting the establishment. The roof consists of a movable cupola or dome. From the balconies of the upper story a prospect of vast extent and grandeur is presented. The spectator is able to see over half the Island of Sicily, the Island of Malta, the Lipari Isles, and the Province of Calabria, on the mainland of Italy. The observatory is erected upon a small cone, which will, in the case of eruption, protect it completely from the lava-stream which always flows down on the opposit side of the volcano.

Nearly Kissed Themselves to Death.

London Telegraph.

At an evening party in Keikheim, a few weeks ago, the conversation happened to turn upon kissing, and the question arose how many salutations of this class could be exchanged between two ardent lovers within a certain space of time. As usual, opinions differed, and the discussion waxed warm. Presently a fiery youth offered to bet anybody present the German equivalent of a ten-pound note that he and his betrothed would kiss one another 10,000 times within ten hours, provided they were permitted to partake of some slight refreshment at intervals of half an hour during the performance. His wager having been accepted and the money posted, the affianced couple addressed themselves to the achievement of their congenial task. At the expiration of the first hour their account stood credited with 2,000 kisses. During the second they added another thousand, and during the third 750 to that number. Then, pitiful to state, they both broke down. The youth's lips were stricken with cramp, and the maiden fainted away. Later on in the evening she was compelled to take to her bed with a sharp attack of neuralgia. An even more distressing result ensued from this surfeit of tender endearment, for it led to the breaking off, by mutual consent, of a hopeful matrimonial engagement. Young lovers should keep this sad tale in mind and moderate their transports, for, strange as it may seem, Dan Cupid himself may be kissed to death.

Petroleum at Sarnia.

Petroleum has been found in large quantities in Sarnia, Ont. About three and a half miles southeast of the town of Sarnia, the usual indications of oil were found at one of the borings at a depth of 600 feet from the surface. Suddenly operations were suspended by the bursting forth of a powerful jet of gas, which became ignited by a torch held by one of the workmen standing at a distance of twenty feet or thirty feet from the well. The gas seemed to be forced out with extraordinary power till it formed a volume of vivid silvery flame, fully thirty feet high. "But the most remarkable feature of this very remarkable exhibition," says the Sarnia Observer, in describing the phenomenon, "is that at intervals of exactly fifteen minutes by the watch there is a grand eruption of water, which mingles with the flames, and, so far from extinguishing them, drives them in sheets far above the highest trees and falls in showers for a considerable distance around the well. The eruption of water which lasts about two or three minutes, is preceded by a gradually increasing roar, accompanied by a series of powerful gasps like the strokes of some mighty engine. The mixture of the water, which is said to be strongly impregnated with sulphur, produces effects in color which are dazzling in their brilliancy and beauty, various shades of yellow and purple predominating."—National Scientific American.

"The Fixed Period."

Anthony Trollope has followed Charles Lamb's advice and taken to writing for antiquity. His new novel, "The Fixed Period," is a humorous sketch of life towards the end of the twentieth century, as it might be affected by an attempt to reconstruct the conditions of human existence so as to cut off altogether from it the period of dwindling and decaying powers, and fix an inevitable limit to the age of men. Mr. Trollope supposes that one of the Pacific colonies of Great Britain, which he calls Britannula, has thrown off her connection with the mother country, established a Republic, and passed a law that the age of her citizens shall never exceed 68 years, and that the last year between 67 and 68 is to be passed meditatively in a kind of honorable seclusion, in a college established for that purpose, where the old shall be "deposited" at 67, and receive euthanasia a year afterwards. The law has, it is supposed, been passed by large majorities, but majorities of the young only, for the island, which had been peopled from New Zealand, was peopled almost wholly by the young, while the few who were really old at the time of the settlement were exempted from its operation. Mr. Trollope works out his grim joke with a good deal of humor.

Pet Animals and Contagious Diseases.

Journal of Comparative Medicine and Medical Record.

The fact that pet animals can carry contagion, and thus be the means of spreading fatal diseases, is not widely known nor duly appreciated. We have heard of authentic cases in which scarlet-fever was communicated from one person to another by means of a cat. Dr. Hewitt, of Lake Superior, relates a somewhat similar instance, in which diphtheria was communicated by the same animal. He had noticed for several days that his pet cat was suffering from an enlargement of the glands of the neck; he also remarked the same in other cats. His cat found a resting-place in the wall behind the stove, and there died. The day the animal was removed diphtheria, in its most violent form, broke out in his family, resulting in the death of two or three of his children, the doctor himself barely escaping with his life. Up to this time the community was remarkably free from sickness of any kind. It was the start of a severe epidemic. We refer to this subject in hopes that more facts bearing upon it may be communicated by our readers. Such facts are at present few, but a little attention paid to the matter would, no doubt, secure much that would be of importance to comparative and to preventive medicine.

Child Christened on a Man-of-War.

Boston Post.

A novel christening ceremony took place on the receiving-ship Wabash at the Charlestown Navy-Yard on Thursday afternoon. The little one was Helen Josephine, daughter of Capt. J. N. Miller, commander of the Wabash. The ship was decorated with flags and bunting, and all the officers and their families were present, as was also the crew of the ship. A shield, composed of navy-revolvers fantastically arranged, appeared in an appropriate place, with the initials "H. J. M." The capstan of the vessel was used as a stand for the baptismal font, and was elegantly decorated with flowers. The water in the font was from the River of Jordan, Holy Land. The Rev. Dr. Lambert, of St. John's Church, Charlestown, conducted the services, and Mr. and Mrs. James E. Tate, of Baltimore, acted as sponsors. After the ceremony the child's feet were placed in earth brought from Maryland, the birthplace of the mother. Mrs. Miller was in mourning for her mother. The child was born on the ship and has never been off it. Capt. Miller leaves soon to take charge of the Tennessee.

The Work of Dreams.

George Peckham, of Oswego, N. Y., a few days since helped to take down some festoons from the walls of the Free Methodist Chapel. The nails suspending them could not be reached, as they were fourteen feet from the floor, and no ladder was at hand. When Mr. Peckham went home that night he was quite worried as to how those nails could be got out. He went to bed as usual, but when he awoke next morning he found himself standing in Hope Chapel with about two pounds of nails lying on the floor, which he had pulled from the ceiling, having got up and gone at the job in the night. He has no idea how he got at the nails unless he took the benches used for seats and piled them up on top of each other till he could reach them; if so, he placed the seats back where they were before he awoke.

Heroic Treatment of a Snake Bite.

San Antonio (Tex.) Express.

Joe Ludlum, the idiot confined in the County Manual Labor Poor House, was bitten by a rattlesnake last Saturday on the forefinger of the left hand, the fangs penetrating both sides of the finger. About three minutes after the bite was inflicted Mrs. Symington, wife of the Superintendent, split the finger on both sides with a razor, poured a small quantity of powder into the wound, and set fire to it. She then applied ammonia, and also gave ammonia and whisky inwardly until the man became drunk. This was a very brave act for a lady to do, and it saved the poor man's life. On Sunday the arm and hand were swollen three times the natural size, but yesterday the swelling had all gone down, and Ludlum is now all right again. The snake was killed and four rattles were taken Lake Shore Weak Again, but the Rest of the Market Ruled Steady.

Attempt to Create a Boom in New York, Chicago & St. Louis Stocks and Bonds.

The Produce Markets Very Irregular—Grain Advanced but Fell Back—Hog Products Firmer.

The April Wheat Deal Closed at $1.42—A Trade Involving Some Thirty Million Bushels.

FINANCIAL.

Stocks were steady but very dull at the opening. An attempt was made to depress Lake Shore below par in order to win heavy bets, but the price, though weak, did not yield so far. Lake Shore sold at the lowest figure it has reached in two years, but the rest of the market was steadier than would have been expected. Acute and perhaps accurate observers think they see indications that Mr. Vanderbilt is selling his Lake Shore and New York Central as rapidly as the market will absorb them, and is getting himself into a position to use the Lake Shore Road without expense to himself as a club with which to fight the new road—the New York, Chicago & St. Louis. During the last fiscal year the number of stockholders of the New York Central has increased from 4,450 to 5,674. Mr. Vanderbilt is reported to be now the owner of $76,000,000 of 4 per cents, a great increase on his holdings of a year ago. At the same time that these intimations are given of sales of Lake Shore, preliminary to a contest with its rival, evident efforts are being made to market the stock of the latter company. Its securities have just been listed on the New York Stock Exchange and will be listed on the Chicago Stock Exchange. Points are liberally given out that they are good things to buy. The common stock of the road, selling at about 15, is worth nothing as collateral, and brokers do not wish to buy it on any margins. Its preferred stock is selling at 33; the preference is for 7 per cent dividends if they are earned. The first mortgage bonds are selling at about 88. The syndicate who are building the road made their payment at the rate of $13,333 cash for $10,000 in first mortgage bonds, $20,000 of prefered stock, and $20,000 of common stock. This gives $50,000 of paper for $13,333 of cash, and the paper if it could be sold at the above prices would be worth $18,400. As far as can be learned there is very little disposition on the part of the public to buy the securities. To buy into a railroad war seems no more attractive to the investor than to buy into a lawsuit. The road is bonded for $15,000,000, the preferred stock amounts to $22,000,000, and the common to $28,000,000. This is a total of $65,000,000 of paper against 520 miles of road, or $120,000 a mile. At the ruling quotations the securities are selling at $47,000 a mile for what certainly has not cost more than $25,000. Hence if the syndicate can create a market even at these prices they will make at least $18,000,000 out of their construction enterprise. But there are indications that they have come into the stock market a little late, and that they are launching their securities on an ebbing and not a rising tide. Their antagonist, the Lake Shore Road, is papered for about $87,000 a mile, and all its stocks and bonds are selling at this moment above par. But when the new road is finished, neither it nor the Lake Shore will be worth as much as if the other road did not exist. The bears in Lake Shore are not bulls on New York, Chicago & St. Louis, and believe that the causes which will, as they think, carry Lake Shore to 90 will not add anything to the value of the stocks and bonds of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Road.

After the appearance of the bank statement the stock market grew a little better, and closed dull but firm.

Foreign exchange remains firm and gold shipments are expected on account of the decrease in produce exports.

Some outside quotations were: Oregon Improvement bonds, 88@88½; Oregon Improvement stock, 67@70; Mutual Union stock, 24½@25; Mutual Union bonds, 78@78½; Oregon Railway & Navigation Company, 138@140; Oregon & Transcontinental, 70½@71; American Cable Construction Company, 24 premium; North River Construction Company, 92@95; New York, Chicago & St. Louis firsts, unlisted, 78¼@78; Tennessee bonds, 55½@56¼.

The leading produce markets were moderately active Saturday, and covered a rather wide range of tone. Wheat was higher in sympathy with reports of a better demand in England for the Continent and hints that the supplies from Russia and India are much less than was expected by British traders. The boys also expected that the wheat clique would push up the long futures in support of the April deal, and were free sellers towards the close when they found out their mistake. Corn was active and higher, with a good demand by May shorts and by shippers, with some inquiry for investment in the longer futures. The market weakened later with the cry "Hobbs is out of it." Provisions moved up and partly back again, in response to the grain markets, being generally strong, with not much doing. Oats advanced 1c for June, and were relatively steady. Rye was materially lower. Mess pork closed steady, at $18.25@18.27½ for June and $18.45@18.47½ for July. Lard closed 5c higher, at $11.12½@11.15 seller May and $11.27½@11.30 for June. Short ribs closed 7½c higher, at $10.17½@10.20 for June. Wheat closed ⅝c lower on futures, at $1.42 bid for April and $1.29⅞@1.29⅞ for June. Corn closed ¼c lower, at 71⅞c bid for April and 71⅝@71¾c May. Oats closed ⅛@¼c higher, at 52¼@52⅜c for May, 51½@51⅝c for June, and 45⅞@45⅞c for July. Rye closed 2c lower at 83c for cash, seller the month, and May, with July nominally at 76c. Barley was nominally $1.08 for No. 2 in store, and 95c for No. 3, with no sales. Samples were a trifle easier. Hogs were active and strong at $6.75@7.30 for light and at $6.75@7.65 for heavy. Cattle were quiet at $3.50@7.85. The receipts for the week were 24,600 cattle, 121,600 hogs, and 11,800 sheep.

The movement in dry goods was on a fairly liberal scale, and the prevalent feeling was again firm. The active season is now about past, but business is expected to be good for some weeks yet. Boots and shoes were quoted quiet, with prices about steady. In the grocery market nothing new was developed beyond an increased firmness in sugars. Trade is progressing satisfactorily, and the tenor of prices is steady. Dried fruits were ordered with fair liberality, and averaged steady. Fish were firm and unchanged. The market for dairy products continues in an unsettled state. Butter is firmer than a few days ago, the demand having improved and the receipts continuing moderate. Sales of creamery were at 24@29c, and of common to choice dairy at 18@25c. There were no changes in prices of oils. Leather, bagging, coal, and pig-iron were also quoted as before.

Broom-corn was in fair request and steady at quotations. Green fruits were moving fairly, without special change either in quality, supply, or price. Eggs were steady at 14½@15c per dozen for fresh. Hides were reported dull and weak, with hardly movement enough to establish quotations. Grease and tallow are in light demand and steady, the supply of both being liberal. Metals and tinners' ware continue active and firm for all descriptions at prices ruling for the past month. The potato market is firm for the better grades, the more common kinds selling at very low figures. Wool is quiet and steady. Seeds were steady, with light offerings, timothy being quotable at $2.15@2.18 for strictly prime, clover-seed at $4.30@4.50 for prime to choice, and flaxseed at $1.35@1.40 for good to choice, with very little of the latter on the market; Hungarian was firm at 90@93c. Hay was in light receipt and firmer for the better grades, which sold at an advance over the prices of the day previous.

Lake freights were fairly active and steady, corn to Buffalo paying 2¼c and wheat 2½c. The engagements aggregated 340,000 bu corn and 40,000 bu wheat.

Rail freights were reported steady on the basis of 25c per 100 lbs of grain and 30c on provisions from Chicago to New York. Through to Liverpool was quoted firmer at 23¼c, but with little doing.

The receipts of wheat at Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, Toledo, and Detroit, reported yesterday, aggregated 76,000 bu. The shipments from the same ports were reported at 148,000 bu. The shipments reported from New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore were 123,000 bu.

O. F. Lindman, of this city, telegraphs from San Francisco: "California wheat will not be more than half a crop."

A car-load of new wheat from Arkansas arrived in St. Louis Saturday, and found a buyer at $4.50 per bu.

A dispatch from Fargo, D. T., says: "Seeding not general yet. About same as last year, which is very late."

For overplus lard, delivered on May contracts, the settlement price has been fixed at $11.15.

It is proposed to offer the coming week another amendment to the rules of the Board of Trade. It is to the effect that shoepegs may be delivered on contracts calling for No. 2 oats. The manufacture of shoepegs is a legitimate industry, and ought to be encouraged, while they do not meet with any demand here as compared with oats, and cost more to produce them. To make the amendment perfect it should include basswood hams. The adoption of the amended amendment would undoubtedly be followed by a great revival in these two important industries, which are at present much neglected.

"Buy five April wheat, and put it down to —— for my account. I shall have to default on my end of the contract."

The April wheat deal expired Saturday in its official form, and is much more nearly closed up actually then generally supposed. There is very good reason to believe that the quantity "defaulted" is something less than 400,000 bu, which is not much out of a deal that has involved trading in fully 30,000,000 bu. It is understood that a large proportion of the defaults are by parties who had the wheat coming to them, and expected it up to the last moment, but failed to receive it, and hence did not deliver. A great deal of settling in the office occurred during the last three days, and comparatively little on 'Change. The market has ruled high all through the month. It stood at about $1.36 during the first four days of the month, sagged to $1.35, or a shade below, touched $1.38 on the 19th, and the motto since then has been "Excelsior," but at a slow rate, till it climbed the apex at $1.42 a few minutes before closing. As elsewhere noted, the receipts of the speculative grade during the month have been but about 160,000 bu, where many expected over 1,000,000 bu, and some fancied it would double that quantity. It is understood that about 10 per cent of the defaults come through the Open Board.

PROVISIONS.

HOG PRODUCTS—Were less active than the average, but firmer, though Liverpool and the local hog market were quoted unchanged. There was not much demand for products, but holders were strong in their views in sympathy with breadstuffs, and only shaded a little when grain fell back. The trading was mostly speculative, the demand for shipment being apparently dull, but the shipments of meats during the week averaged about 2,000,000 lbs per day, which exceeds the gross weight of the difference between the receipts and shipments of hogs. The packing since the close of February is reported as 411,000 hogs, against 386,000 to date last year, and 656,000 to do in 1880. The packing at Cedar Rapids since the close of the winter season is reported at 39,113 hogs, against 38,098 to date last year. The packing at Kansas city since the close of the winter season is reported at 85,000 hogs. The packing at Milwaukee is reported at 28,360 hogs, against 20,829 to date last year and 25,457 to date in 1880.

Short ribs closed at $10.17½@10.20 seller June and $10.27½@10.30 seller July. Long clears were quoted at $9.90 loose and $10.15 boxed; Cumberlands, 10¼@10½c boxed; long-cut hams, 11¾@12c; sweet-pickled hams quoted at 11¾@12c for 16@16 lb averages; green hams, same averages, 10¾@11c.

Bacon quoted at 8¼@8½c for shoulders, 11¼@11½c for short ribs, 11¾@11⅞c for short clears, 12½@13c for hams, all canvased and packed.

BEEF—Was quiet at $11.00@11.50 for mess, $12.00@12.50 for extra mess, and $24.00@25.00 for hams.

BREADSTUFFS AND SEEDS.

FLOUR—There was a little more doing, and the market was quoted strong. Some of the purchases were for shipment. Sales were reported of 250 brls and 2,350 sacks springs, mostly at $6.25@6.75; 300 brls low grades at $3.95; and 50 brls rye flour on private terms. Total equal to 2,250 brls. Winter flours were quoted at $6.00@7.00; shipping springs, $5.50@7.00; the low grade springs, $3.25@5.00. Rye flour was quoted at about $5.00@5.12½.

OTHER MILLSTUFFS—Were again easier, with a fair supply, and only moderate demand. Sales were reported of 11 cars bran at $19.25@20.75; 5 cars middlings at $20.75@22.75; 1 car shorts at $20.75; 1 car feed at $23.00; 1 car bolted corn-meal at $30.50; and 3 cars wheat screenings at $15.75@15.50. All per ton.

SPRING WHEAT—Was active and irregularly stronger. The price for June advanced ⅝@¾c, but closed ⅝c lower than on Friday afternoon, while April advanced 2c and stood at the top till trading was over for the day (and for the month). Public advices from England noted a quiet tone though calling the market firm, but the private cables quoted a good cargo demand for the Continent, and said that the supplies from Russia and India are not turning out anything like as large as was expected. It is probable that this news turned the scale on futures, as the market was weak early in sympathy with an easy tone reported from New York. Our receipts were again light, even the close of the April deal only bringing in 44 car-loads of No. 2, and completing a record of but about 160,000 bu of that grade for the entire month, or an average of (say) 6,400 bu for each business day. A vessel was chartered Saturday to take out 40,000 bu, or one-quarter of the month's receipts. These facts were regarded by some as proving that there is practically no wheat to come in before the next crop, and that high prices must be the rule till next harvest. But it was thought that the parties controlling the April deal would bid up the longer futures, which they did not do, and the result was later weakness. Cash No. 2 or April was steady at $1.40 up to about 1 o'clock, except that part of a car-load sold at $1.39, whether with intent to affect the average of prices or not is not known. At the close $1.42 was bid for April, supposed to be by parties representing the clique. There appeared to be little settlement for April on 'Change. Car-lots of No. 3 were quoted at $1.19@1.20 and rejected at about 90@95c. Spot sales were reported of 5,000 bu and 30 cars No. 2 at $1.40; 11 cars No. 3 at $1.19@1.20; and 12 cars by sample at 95c@$1.22¼. Total about 27,000 bu. Seller June opened at $1.30¼, sold at $1.30⅝, declined to $1.29⅞, then advanced to $1.30¾, and weakened to $1.29⅞, closing at $1.29⅞ bid. Seller May ranged 1¼c below June early to 1½c discount later. Seller July ranged 1¼c below June. Seller August sold at $1.16@1.17, closing with sellers at the inside. Seller September sold at $1.08@1.08¼ and the year at $1.05¼@1.05½. The following table shows the range of the day on the principal deals:

	Closed Friday, bid.	Range Saturday.	Closed do. bid.
Fresh receipts	$1.38	$ 1.40	$1.40
Seller April	1.40	1.42 @1.42	1.42
Seller May	1.28⅞	1.28¾@1.30¼	1.28
Seller June	1.30⅛	1.29⅞@1.30½	1.29⅞
Seller July	1.28½	1.28½@1.29¾	1.28

WINTER WHEAT—Sale was reported of 1 car low grade at 95c in store.

CORN—Was active and irregularly higher. The market for May advanced ⅝@¾c, but closed ¼c lower than on Friday afternoon. Liverpool was quoted firm, but our receipts were again large, and those of the coming month were expected to show a further increase. There was a good shipping demand, but it did not open till late, as buyers wished to obtain an advantage from the larger volume of offerings. There was an active inquiry by May shorts, and this apparently stimulated confidence in buying the longer futures. After noon the story went out that the leading longs had unloaded, and left the crowd to carry the property, which was followed by a revulsion, and the late feeling was weak, though nobody seemed to know of any change in the situation. Everything really depends upon the consumptive demand for the corn arriving here during May. The East is said to be still bare, and, if this be so, the demand may be fully equal to the offerings. Car-lots of No. 2 closed at 71⅞c, with rejected at 63c. Spot sales were reported of 16 cars high mixed at 71¾@72½c; 7 cars new do at 71@71½c; 69,000 bu (boat-load and 53 cars) No. 2 at 71⅞@72½c; 22,000 bu do, posted, at 70⅝c; 135 cars rejected and new mixed at 63@71½c; 25 cars by sample at 67½@71c on track; and 34 cars do at 69@72c free on board. Total about 340,000 bu. Seller May opened at 71⅝c, declined to 71c, advanced to 72½c, and fell back to 71¼c, closing at 71⅝c asked. Seller the month ranged ⅛c below May, June was the same as May to ⅛c below it, and July was ⅛@⅜c above May. Seller August sold at 72@72½c. September was nearly nominal at 71@72½c, and the year was quoted at 57⅞@58⅛. The following table shows the range of the day on the principal deals:

	Closed Friday, bid.	Range Saturday.	Closed do. bid.
Spot, fresh receipts	71¼	71⅝@72½	71⅞
Seller April	71½	71½@72⅛	71⅞
Seller May	71⅛	71 @72½	71⅝
Seller June	71⅝	71 @72½	71⅝
Seller July	71⅝	71⅛@72½	71⅞

OATS—Were fairly active and ⅛@¾c higher, the most marked gain being on the June delivery, for which there was a continuous demand from the opening. While there appeared to be a fair degree of confidence among buyers, the transactions as a rule were confined to small lots. New York telegrams reported the market strong. No. 2 cash was little called for, ranging at 52@52¼c, rejected selling at 48½c. Seller May ranged at 52¼@52½c, and June at 51¼@51⅝c, closing at 51½c. July sold early at 45⅝c, advanced to 46⅛c, and closed at 45⅞c. August sold at 37⅛@37¼c, and the year 34⅝@34⅞c, closing at the latter figure. Samples were in demand and higher. Cash sales were made of 6 cars at 52½c for No. 2 and 48½c for rejected in store; 19 cars by sample at 51@51¾c for rejected mixed, 52½@53½c for rejected white, 53@54c for No. 2, and 53½@55c for good to choice No. 2 white on track; 38 cars at 45@49½c for no grade, 51@52c for rejected mixed, 52@53c for rejected white, 53@53½c for No. 2, and 54½c for No. 2 white free on board. Total equal to about 47,000 bu. The following were the closing prices of Friday, together with the range Saturday:

No. 2 oats.	Closed Friday, bid.	Range yesterday.	Closed do. bid.
Spot	51½	52¼@52½	52¼
Seller April	51⅞	52¼@52½	52¼
Seller May	51⅞	52@52½	52¼
Seller June	50⅞	51¼@51⅝	51½
Seller July	45⅜	45⅝@46⅛	45⅞
Seller August	37⅜	37⅛@37½	37¼

RYE—Was dull and 2c lower, No. 2 in store selling at 83c, with May at the same figure. Nothing was done in the later options, July being quotable nominally at 80c and August at 74c. The receipts, though small, are increasing somewhat, and this fact, together with the liberal stock in store, has a tendency to weaken the market. Cash sales were made of 2 cars at 83c for No. 2 in store; 3 cars by sample at 84½@85c on track; 1 car at 77c for rejected free on board. Total equal to about 3,000 bu.

BARLEY—Was lifeless so far as trading from store was concerned, No. 2 being nominally quotable at $1.08 and No. 3 at 95c. The sample market was slow and a trifle weaker as a result of heavier receipts. Cash sales were made of 11 cars by sample at 81@75c for No. 5, 92@97c for No. 4, and 98c@$1.05 for good to choice No. 3 on track; 2 cars at 82½c for No. 5 and 92c for No. 4 free on board; 2 cars at 83½c for No. 5 and 92c and 96c for No. 4 delivered. Total equal to about 7,000 bu.

SEEDS—The offerings were generally light and the market steady for all descriptions. The bulk of the seed arriving is of a poor quality, which fact makes it difficult to determine the actual value of the prime article. Timothy was quotable at $2.15@2.18 for prime, clover seed at $4.30@4.50 for prime to choice, and flaxseed at $1.35@1.40 for good to choice. Hungarian was a trifle firmer and quotable at 90@93c. Sales were made of 31 bags clover seed at $4.25@4.70; 1 car and 436 bags timothy seed at $1.60@2.17½; 14 cars flaxseed at $1.37@1.40; 56 bags Hungarian at 88c.

OUR DARLING.

[TO MR. AND MRS. R. H. T.]

For The Chicago Tribune.

Was it a dream I had last night?
  I thought our darling strayed
Far up a distant mountain's hight,
  From the place he idly played.

I dreamed I saw his golden hair
  Flash lightly on the wind,
While his hurrying, busy little feet
  Left us all so far behind.

He had his tender eyes of blue
  Fixed on that city afar
Whose turrets shine the azure through,
  Beyond the sunset far.

He was treading a softened pathway
  That would never tire his feet,
And a voice seemed calling our darling,
  Whose cadence was rare and sweet.

We can ill spare our darling
  From his little wicket-chair;
For every nook of the house was full
  When he was sitting there.

And the world itself was so complete
  And full to the brim with joy;
For all was tinged by the glowing hope
  We had in our darling boy.

But we'll never call him back, dear,
  From that city rare and old,
Whose walls are all of gems, dear,
  And whose streets are beaten gold;

Where the songs of the holy Angels
  Will fall on his sweet child-ear;
Where his innocent mind will ripen
  As it never would ripen here.

But we'll keep our garments pure as his,
  That we too, by-and-by,
May join our darling where he is,
  In the Father's house on high.

AUSTIN, Ill., April 18, 1882. M. O. P.

An Incapable Administration.

Easton (Pa.) Free Press (Rep.).

The genius of Mr. Blaine would, through this scheme for holding a conference of American nations, have driven English goods out of all American markets, and replaced them with manufactures from the United States, pouring millions of dollars into this country for distribution among our manufacturers and working people. For the success of this scheme Mr. Blaine's commercial knowledge, boldness, and promptness were essential. To refer so great an enterprise of foreign policy to a lot of legislative chatterers is to confess inability to grasp its significance, and will prevent its proper achievement. It was a purely administrative measure, from which Garfield and Blaine could have realized a splendid fulfillment. But an Administration that mistakes a clique of trading politicians for a whole Nation, and that dickers in post-offices instead of dealing with ideas, can't have capacity to handle it, and had better leave it alone altogether.

Warning to Bad Spellers.

Gentlemen who are uncertain in their spelling must be very careful when they write anonymous letters. Such, at least, is the moral taught by a case tried at Westminster on Saturday. One Mr. Goodwin appeared as a defendant in an action in which he was charged with the authorship of certain post-cards tending to damage the commercial reputation of a rival of his in business. The writing of these post-cards was stoutly denied by Goodwin. Unfortunately for him, there were certain peculiarities in the orthography to which attention was directed. Thus "sorry" was written "sorrey," and "careful" appeared as "cairful." Asked in the witness-box to spell these words, Mr. Goodwin innocently adopted the eccentricities of the post-cards, and thus insured his defeat in the action, a verdict of £400 damages being given against him. With this terrible warning against us, nobody can say in the future that it does not pay to learn to spell.

Unavailing were the efforts of Mr. W. M. F. Quinlan, superintendent of Glass Works, Crystal City, Mo., to cure himself of a most troublesome sore on his knee. One week's faithful use of St. Jacobs Oil cured him completely, much to his great comfort.

REAL ESTATE.

Transactions Greater in Number in April than in Any Previous Month Since 1873.

Values Not Large, and Agents Are Working Harder for Less Pay.

The Project for a South Shore Watering Place in Good Shape.

A Powerful Syndicate Buying Land and Making Plans for a Grand Lake Side Hotel.

Building in New York Not Checked by the High Price of Material and Wages.

Real Estate Active in a Retail Way.

The fact that the transfers for April are larger in number than for any month since 1873, but that the amount of values is not as great as it has been in some preceding months, fully describe the condition of the real-estate market. A leading agent said in giving his recent experience that, while he and all his assistants were worked to the verge of exhaustion, his commission account was not as large as in April, 1881. He had done ten times as much work, and had received less for it. Then there were sales of valuable pieces of inside property; now the activity was all in lots and low-priced dwelling-houses. People of moderate means are buying lots and homes. A great mass of purchasers has begun to move.

A conspicuous feature of the real-estate market is the absence of booms. Some enterprises that promised brilliant things a few months ago are languishing and seem likely to die. Other new ones are being got ready for public favor.

The recent heavy purchases of acre property at South Chicago, in the vicinity of Clark's Point, and including the Westfall Subdivision, are preliminary to the establishment of what has so often been talked about—a watering-place for Chicago. The new track to South Chicago, now being laid by the Illinois Central, will be finished this summer, and will bring this whole district into easy connection with the city. A line of steamers will be run to Clark's Point, where there is a pier and a good landing place. An architect has been sent East to study the best models of watering-place hotels. The plan is to erect a handsome house which will cost at least $250,000, and will be connected directly with the Illinois Central, so that visitors may be carried from the city to the hotel. Those who prefer to drive can reach the point in an hour and a half. The beach and all the grounds have great natural advantages for such a resort. Its attractions will be hightened by the nearness of the South Parks. Some of our leading citizens have taken hold of this enterprise, and there is a fair prospect that at last it will be carried out.

A bonus of $190,000 was offered the managers of the New York, Chicago & St. Louis Road by a delegation from Fort Wayne last week if the company would establish its new car-works in that city. President Cummings, who has repeatedly stated that the works would be placed at South Chicago, now says the question of location will not be determined for some time.

A site at South Chicago is being looked for by the Suspension Car-Truck Manufacturing Company of New York, which proposes to start a Western branch with a capital of $200,000.

Mr. S. E. Gross has bought five acres at the northwest corner of Lincoln avenue and Diversy street for $19,000; five acres at the northwest corner of Rockwell and Waubansia streets for $12,000; and seventeen lots, corner of Bloomingdale road and Fairfield avenue, for $4,250. The acre tracts he will at once subdivide and improve with trees, sidewalks, etc., and add them to his list of subdivisions in and around the city. He reports sales of lots as active.

Joseph B. Chandler has sold for M. W. Moulton to D. D. Owen thirty-three lots at the corner of South Park avenue and Sevnty-seventh-street, near Grand Crossing, for $4,000 and taxes of 1881; ten acres in W. ½ N. E. ¼ Sec. 1, 37, 14, near South Chicago, to Charles C. Ramsey for $700 per acre; fifty feet in Groveland Park for L. J. Perry to Messrs. Borden & Selleck for $5,500. They buy with the intention of erecting a couple of homes thereon this summer.

The Calumet & Chicago Canal & Dock Company sold to Capt. Charles H. Nix the South Chicago Hotel property for $35,000 cash.

Frank P. Whipple has sold house and lot Butterfield street, corner Thirtieth, for $2,500; house and lot Butterfield street, corner Twenty-seventh, for $4,600; house and lot South Dearborn street, near Thirey-sixth, for $2,300; lot on Dearborn street, near Thirty-fifth, for $1,150; lot on Butterfield street, near Twenty-ninth, for $800; lot on Portland avenue, near Thirty-fifth street, $650.

In the sales of the week were some on Michigan avenue that show an advance in values. Among them were seventy-five feet between Thirty-first and Thirty-second streets, east front, $425 per foot; 120 feet located north of Thirtieth street sold to a Mr. Kent at $475 per foot; fifty-seven feet located north of Twenty-eighth street, west front, $320 per front foot, for which $400 is now asked from a would-be purchaser, while $500 per foot is being asked for property directly opposite, on account of its advantage of having an east front.

The northwest corner of Michigan avenue and Eldredge court has been sold—40x160—to Mr. C. L. Willoughby for $22,500.

S. D. Babcock purchased 24x100 feet on North Clark street, near Illinois, for $21,000.

B. P. Hutchison sold 25x100 feet on Fourth avenue, north of Van Buren street, for $11,875.

O. R. Keith has bought of the Fidelity Savings Bank ninety-nine feet on Grand boulevard and ninety-nine feet on Calumet avenue, for $11,560.

James Van Inwagen has bought 170x100 feet on Twenty-sixth street, southwest corner of Indiana avenue, for $31,000.

Potter Palmer has bought 294x150 feet on the Grand boulevard, southwest corner of Forty-third, $24,900.

W. D. Kerfoot & Co. have sold 76 feet on Dearborn avenue, south of Delaware place, $17,500; 94x98 feet, northwest corner Huron and State, $20,000; 25 feet on Maple east of Dearborn, $4,400; 23 feet on State south of Van Buren with building, $22,500; 22x100 feet on West Madison, east of Ogden avenue, $235 per foot; 71 feet, northwest corner Chicago avenue and Cass, $11,200; house and lot, Adams street, near Lafin, $12,500; 15 acres near Pullman, $18,000; south side of River street, 150 feet, north of South Water, $25,000; 90x150 feet, southwest corner of Hyde Park avenue and Sixty-third street, with house, $5,000; 22x80 feet on Milwaukee avenue, near Indiana street, with brick house, $6,000; house and lot, Morgan, near Harrison, $4,600; 100x170 feet on Deming court, $4,000; 75x90 feet on Diversy avenue, near Halsted, $3,000; 50x120 feet, Chicago avenue, near Wood, $2,200; 2¼ acres on northwest corner Chicago avenue and Hoyne, $12,500; 48 feet on Taylor, near Centre avenue, $2,800; 2 houses and lots, Ashland avenue, near Fulton, $8,000; 1913 Michigan avenue, $19,000.

B. A. Ulrich has sold four acres at South Chicago in Township 37, Range 14, to A. B. Meeker for $800 an acre.

J. C. Magill & Co. have made the following sales: No. 330 Park avenue, near Leavitt street, octagon marble-front house and thirty-foot lot, for $6,750; the house and lot No. 579 Division street, $7,400; No. 4306 Langley avenue, two-story and basement brick house, with lot, $3,000; and a lot on Talman avenue, near Fulton street, for $550.

T. B. Boyd sold for Mrs. Mary E. Sands to Abraham Knisely No. 421 West Monroe street, a twelve-room modern dwelling and lot 30x118 to alley, for $7,500; for the Rev. S. McChesney, of Burlington, Ia., to Miss Martha B. Ketz, modern eleven-room brick dwelling, barn, and lot, 20½x125, No. 136 Park avenue, for $7,200.

W. P. Larkin has sold property at Humboldt Park and Garfield as follows: Nine lots for $4,750; one house and two lots for $3,500.

Ira Brown sold seven lots at La Grange to A. M. Clarke for $1,400; one lot at La Grange to Phelix Vain, $200; four lots at La Grange to C. Slater, $800; four lots in Glencoe to J. Cades, $400; four lots in Glencoe to Christian Olsen, $400; two lots in Glencoe to T. A. Groven, $200; one lot and cottage to C. H. Lyon, $1,000.

In the number of transactions April has been the most active month since the panic. Following is a comparison of monthly transactions, not including in the total for April the transfers which may be made today:

	No.	Consideration.
April, 1882	1,168	$ 4,933,155

April, 1881	1,026	4,104,982

Four months in 1882	4,021	17,545,638
Four months in 1881	3,189	15,887,339
Four months in 1880	2,610	12,690,730
Entire year 1878	4,078	16,648,024

Among the building-permits issued yesterday was one to John Zell, to erect a two-story dwelling, No. 51 Samuel street, to cost $2,500; one to F. H. Behmeyer, to erect a five-story warehouse, 60 by 100 feet, Nos. 206 to 210 Michigan street, to cost $20,000; one to George A. Seaverns, to erect a four-story building for stores and flats, corner of Wabash avenue and Twenty-second, to cost $20,000; one to the same, to erect five three-story stores and flats, 200 by 60 feet, Twenty-second street, near Wabash avenue, to cost $40,000; and one to S. H. Wheeler, to erect a five-story building for flats, corner of Rush and Ohio streets, to cost $90,000.

Real-Estate Loans.

Real-estate loans in Chicago, on account of the comparatively small amount of building going on, are dull. Money is offered freely in large amounts at 5 per cent. In New York private lenders are offering unlimited amounts of money on real-estate mortgages at 4½ per cent, and they can furnish almost any amount at that rate. If this is local capital, and, therefore, subject to the 2 38-100 per cent personal-property tax, it only leaves the lenders of the money about 2 per cent net. The probability, however, is that it is largely, if not wholly, capital from other adjoining States, where the owners evade the personal-property tax in their own localities. It is one of the anomalies of the real-estate loan market in New York that while private capitalists are offering money at 4½ per cent on mortgages, and evading the law and their consciences to get it, the great life-insurance companies and savings banks declare they can readily get six per cent for all they desire to put out on real estate. They explain the difference by saying that it is well understood that any money borrowed of them need not be paid at maturity of the loan, but can run as long as the borrower desires to keep it, provided the market value of the property does not depreciate below double the amount of the loan. This, in fact, is probably the greatest agency in keeping up the prices of real estate in this city. The New York State life-insurance companies are prohibited by law from loaning any of their funds outside of a certain radius of the city hall, except in the State of New York. The great bulk of their loans are really within a radius of five or six miles from the city-hall. The concentration of their enormous revenues—collected in all parts of the United States—upon the property of New York, Brooklyn, and Jersey City necessarily has the effect to keep prices of real estate much higher than they would be otherwise.

Sales and Building in New York.

At the New York Exchange there was a fair volume of business last week, and prices have in some instances exceeded the expectations of the sellers of the property. For all well-located property there is a ready market at good prices. One large auction sale of thirty houses in Brooklyn on Wednesday, amounting in the aggregate to $170,085, did not realize such satisfactory prices; and still another, of six lots, on One Hundred and Fifty-second street, west of the boulevard, for an aggregate of $5,400, was made at low prices.

Building in New York is very active. Plans were filed one day last week for thirty new houses at an estimated cost of $400,000. With one exception they were all intended for private residences, and about one-half are on the apartment plan. The sites are for the most part on the upper portion of the island, which the elevated railroads have made so accessible. Until very recently a large portion of this section was a wilderness, but at the present rate of progress there will be scarcely a desirable lot vacant there ten years hence. In first three months of the year the Building Department granted 590 permits for buildings, and since that date about fifty more (not yet registered) have been granted.

OF THE REGISTERED PERMITS,

167 are for flats, varying in price from $6,000 to $80,000 each; 171 for dwellings, bricks, brown stone and brick, and frame, costing all the way from $2,500 to $200,000 each; eighty-seven for tenements, thirty-five for stables, twenty-seven for factories, including a big brewery; twenty-six for first-class stores, valued at from $8,000 to $60,000 each, and for large numbers of other valuable buildings for business purposes. Harlem takes the lead in the building of dwellings. The demand for flats is so great in many parts of the city that most of the new buildings are fully rented to eligible tenants long before the paint on them is dry.

A marked change in the attitude of landlords in New York is noted by the Times of that city. Where landlords have gone to extremes and stood resolutely immovable in their demands for advanced rents, a rather disastrous result has been chronicled. The tenants themselves in many such cases have unexpectedly shown an equal amount of resolution and determined will, and have vacated the presence, leaving the landlord, upset in his calculations, with unrented property on his hands. Attention has been called to the fact that such owners are very glad to rent at former rates and are convinced that they made a mistake in pushing the rent question too far. While the market is firm, it is still not strong enough to induce tenants to yield to any exhorbitant demand for increased rents. The situation has not been quite like this in Chicago. Building has not been as active here as in New York, and there has been and is an actual scarcity of houses. Rents have risen more on low-priced than on high-priced tenements.

A Great Sewerage Enterprise.

Boston has undertaken a great sewerage enterprise to drain the new and fashionable back bay quarter. The sum of $2,396,960.68 has been spent already, $1,356,039.32 more has been appropriated, and a further sum of $1,500,000 will be needed to complete it. About eleven miles of main and branch intercepting sewers have up to this time been completed and connected with the pumping-station on the shore just south of the peninsula of South Boston; enormous engines, pumps, and tanks have been erected at that point, at an expense which it was estimated would be $350,000, but which will very probably amount to $900,000. From this pumping-station a tunnel 7,000 feet long is nearly completed under the bottom of Dorchester Bay to Moon Island, where a reservoir covering an area of four and a half acres is rapidly approaching completion. At this point, it is hardly necessary to say, the sewage is to be emptied into the outer harbor at appropriate stages of the tide.

CARELESS DRIVING.

Some Interesting Figures from the Police Reports—Pedestrians Seem to Have No Rights Which Drivers Are Bound to Respect.

In a large city where thousands and hundreds of thousands of people are congregated there must necessarily be thousands who are sufficiently wealthy or whose business demands that they furnish locomotion for themselves or their goods by means of horses and vehicles. Of these thousands there are quite as necessarily hundreds who are not capable of driving a horse, and hence it follows that in any large city there must be many people who suffer by the carelessness, ignorance, or positive incapacity of the drivers of horses and vehicles. Many limbs are broken and several lives are lost by reckless or careless driving every year in Chicago, and to find out to what extent this evil prevails would be a study as interesting as it is instructive. The reporter who was assigned this task had but one recourse, and that was the records of the Police Department, and even there a long and tedious search was necessary to present the few figures which were collated. The police officers undoubtedly report all the accidents which come under their notice, but it is quite as undoubted a fact that they do not hear of one-half the accidents which happen. Careless and reckless driving is extremely dangerous to the community at large, and, as this can be prevented easily, it follows that the rate of injuries should be chargeable entirely to the offenders themselves or to the municipal authorities who fail to properly punish a person who drives fast is malicious, and he should be punished accordingly.

The reporter in going over the musty record confined his investigations solely to the collisions, runaways, and cases of reckless driving, which, from the tenor of the reports, it appeared might easily have been avoided. Looking back for a year from yesterday, he found that there had been 142 such cases, involving bruises, fractures, broken limbs, and even loss of life. These accidents, commencing May 1, 1881, were distributed as follows: May, 18; June, 15; July, 14; August, 16; September, 15; October, 6; November, 5; December, 17; January, 9; February, 10; March, 4, and April, 13. These figures serve to show that this class of accidents is less frequent in the colder than in the warmer months, although December, by an exception, looms up with a large average. March has the smallest number, while May stands first on the list, and the fact that there was an unusual number of accidents from heavy trucks, probably used in moving, may explain this fact. Certain it is that in 142 accidents during the past year over 200 people were maimed or killed whose injuries are traceable directly to

CARELESS AND RECKLESS DRIVING.

The classification of the accidents is difficult. The injured people seem to have been largely either children or old ladies whose inexperience or helplessness made them fall easy victims to the reckless drivers. Taking the police reports as a basis, it was found that twenty-two cases were probably fatal, while four were killed outright. The other reports were filled with instances of broken legs, arms, collar-bones, and severe bruises. As to the class of people who seem to have been most careless, the responsibility seems to be divided between buggy drivers and expressmen. The latter are evidently the favorits. A perusal of the reports will satisfy any one that the drivers of wagons belonging to the great express companies have much of the blame to shoulder, for it is evident from the police reports that in their anxiety to get their loads to the depot on time they distinguish themselves by the most reckless driving, and in every case reported they drove on without stopping to ascertain the extent of the injuries they had inflicted. The injuries from drivers of buggies come first from fast young youths, perhaps partially intoxicated, and secondly from careless drivers who either collide with other vehicles or stationary objects, or else by their criminal carelessness allow their steeds to run away. Thus it may be noted that in the month of May of the eighteen avoidable accidents there were six runaways, where it seemed as if the driver were to blame. In July, with fourteen accidents, one-half were runaways. Many other cases seem to arise from the drunkenness of the driver. The examples of carelessness are chiefly found in cases where incompetent drivers allow their own vehicles to collide with other wagons, inducing runaways or other serious casualties. A few sample cases will illustrate the whole.

Thousands of people have often cursed the tender of the Clark street bridge, but even these would not be glad to learn that about a year ago he was knocked down and severely bruised by a reckless brute, who drove rapidly across the bridge and away before he could be identified. During the same month two reckless youths were driving at a break-neck speed, when, on turning the corner, they were upset, fortunately injuring no one but themselves. A printer was badly injured by a man driving a rig at a furious rate of speed, and it was no wonder, for the rig was stolen and the driver was a thief.

A little Italian boy was instantly killed last June at the corner of Clark and Madison streets. The driver could not get away, and he was arrested, but it could not be learned that he ever was punished. Two unknown boys were driving a heavy milk wagon the following month, when they ran over and instantly killed a baby boy by their carelessness. They ran away, and were never heard of. An old man was fatally injured by a horse and buggy, but the driver escaped, and will be forever unknown.

As to the punishment to be meted out to these reckless and careless drivers, it needs only to be said that the records show eight persons arrested for criminal carelessness during the year under consideration. The arrests were duly made, but that there were any convictions. In the majority of cases the drivers hastened away and were unknown. In only three cases did they appear to have enough interest in their victims to themselves provide for their future comfort and convey them to their homes. That there were no more arrests is not to be wondered at, as police officers cannot be everywhere, and they can rely for information only on the vague information furnished by such witnesses of the accident as they may happen to find. Certain it is that this great and growing evil will never be stopped until every citizen organizes himself into a section of a vigilance committee and forcibly detains every driver who is the cause of an accident until the merits of the case are duly ascertained. This is a duty which all good citizens owe to themselves and to the community, and until they do this they must expect that they or any other pedestrians are liable to be injured by the carelessness of the drunken or reckless drivers of spirited steeds.

SUBURBAN.

Evanston.

The last meeting of the old Board of Trustees and the first meeting of the new one will occur Tuesday evening. Of the old board, three members, Trustees C. T. May, Thomas Lord, and J. C. Allen, hold over for another year; J. J. Parkhurst has been reëlected, and C. L. Jenks and H. C. Lunt go out. The new members are C. J. Gilbert and Alexander Drummond. It is altogether likely that Mr. Parkhurst will again be elected President of the board, and that the Attorney and Treasurer of the past year will be continued another term. It is at least curious that the two new members were the avowed and only candidates of the old fire companies; and probably one of the first questions that will come up for the consideration of the board will be that of protection against fire. If the assertions of the partisans and opponents of the old companies go for anything there will be lively times on the board before the question is settled. At least, the presence of these two new members makes it certain that the village will not be left another year wholly without any protection against fire.

The final meeting of the Social Club for the year took place Thursday evening, and was participated in by as large an attendance as has characterized any meeting of the season. The evening was begun with a comedy "Home," having a caste comprised of Messrs. H. A. Allyn, George E. Gooch, L. W. Hoyt, and George S. Lord, and Mrs. H. M. Kiddar, Miss Julia Watson, and Miss Bessie Tiernan. After the play came dancing, an after-midnight lunch, and then dancing again until past 2 in the morning. Before another season begins there is a prospect that the club will be in a home of its own, built after the most approved club-plans, and combining all the accompaniments of modern club-life.

Evanston begins already to assume its summer appearance as a resort, though the late unusually fresh breezes have had a tendency to retard it. The two hotels, the Avenue House and Frenche's, are engaged for the summer to their full capacity, and had the projected new hotel on the lake shore been built the disappointed inquirers after a summer abode would have insured it a paying business. Heretofore the transient summer residents in the village have come largely from the South, but the greatly increasing number who come this summer from the city shows that the convenience and beauty of Evanston is being appreciated by business men whose engagements will not allow of their being away from their offices any great length of time. Early in the spring it was thought that perhaps the building business was being overdone, but the fact is that the demand for houses now far exceeds the supply. The summer promises well for enjoyments. The new driving park, not for public races, but for pleasure driving solely, the extended and now really beautiful lake-shore drive, the complete boating facilities, and the contemplated summer evening concerts by the military band are sure evidences that what was once a quiet village, whose delights were known to but a few, is becoming a rival of Chicago as a summer resort. Only the advent of warm weather is now needed to set the round of pleasure going.

The Hinman essay contest has been set for May 12.

The Senior class has elected the remainder of its class officers: Field Marshal, S. B. Black; Captain of class ball nine, W. A. Dyche; writer of class song, A. G. Briggs.

Jefferson.

Friday night one of a gang of burglars was arrested by Capt. Sweetzer at Montrose station with goods in his possession of the value of some $7,200. Three caboose-cars of the Northwestern line had been broken into, and the goods taken consisted of the clothing, overcoats, money, etc., belonging to the freight conductors and brakemen. This system of thieving had been going on for some time. The man captured gave the name of Michael Featherstone, and yesterday was arraigned before Justice Linscott and held to the Criminal Court in bonds of $500. At the examination the property was fully identified and claimed by numerous railroad employés, even to a complete suit worn by the prisoner. Although there was much more property taken which has not yet been recovered it will doubtless be found.

Pullman.

Two accidents occurred at Pullman yesterday. A Swede named Olsen, who was employed on the construction of the water-tower, had a miraculous escape from instant death. He was standing in the shaft at the bottom of the tower when one of the barrows used on the hoisting-machine fell from the top of the tower, a distance of nearly 200 feet, and crushed him to the earth. He was attended by Dr. Rankin, who expresses the opinion that the man's injuries, though serious, are not necessarily fatal. A man named Charles Hansen, employed in the machine-shops at Pullman, had three fingers of his left hand cut off yesterday afternoon by a circular saw.

South Chicago.

The community was intensely excited yesterday by the discovery that a German named Louis Guthman had buried one of his children in the woods near South Chicago. It was supposed to be a case of murder, and the man was at once arrested. Subsequent developments proved, however, that the man was ignorant of the requirements of the law, and had buried his dead child in the woods to save expense. He was released upon his promise to provide proper burial for the body.

ART IN CHICAGO.

Reception and Sale of the Society of Decorative Art.

The reception on Tuesday and Wednesday last of the Chicago Society of Decorative Art was a pronounced success in the matter of attendance, great interest being manifested by the crowds of ladies who thronged the rooms in the many attractive and beautiful objects of house decorations which were placed on exhibition. Those executed by the society have been already described and received a due share of attention, but of course the elaborate and costly pieces of needle-work received from the Society of Decorative Art of New York were much admired and commented upon. Among the many artistic things still on exhibition is a partiere designed by Samuel Coleman and valued at $500. The centre of the curtain is of iridescent silk, upon which is outlined the rising sun and azalea blossoms; above this is a silk fringe upon which is embroidered a conventionalized design of horse-chestnuts and leaves; at the bottom is a band of conventional roses and lilies in crewel work; the whole surrounded by a wide border of plush of terra cotta or crushed strawberry color. This curtain is very subdued in tone, but of such rich textures and careful workmanship that it is quite imposing in appearance. A tablespread of plush in an old English design was very elaborate, as was also a partiere band, designed by Morris and executed in Queen Anne darning in the most elegant shades. A tablespread of myrtle-green satin embroidered in silks in a pattern of seaweeds and corals in natural colors, bordered by a band of plush, and finished with a fringe of coral and green silk, was much admired. There were also many beautiful screens, cushions, and other articles which no mere description can give any adequate idea of, but which should be seen to be appreciated.

Mrs. Preussner and Her Pupils.

Mrs. Preussner gave a reception at her studio, No. 66 Park avenue, on Thursday afternoon and evening, upon which occasion she exhibited a great many artistic objects in the shape of oil and water-color pictures, pastel portraits, pottery and china painting, the work of herself and pupils. Mrs. Preussner has recently returned from New York, where she has been studying pastel painting, and she has completed four portraits, which are very pleasing in tone. Among the many pretty things which adorned her room was a table-spread of olive-green felt, around which was painted as a border a design of wild roses and other field flowers. A mirror of plate glass was framed in wood decorated with a spray of apple blossoms and a flight of birds. A very effective piece of tapestry-painting was shown, and an idea of a screen for a country home was given by a broadly-painted design of grapevine leaves and grapes upon fine yellow matting. Another pretty suggestion, and one quite useful to those who do not understand china-painting, was to be seen in the bowls or vases for holding lamps. Those were richly painted in ordinary oil colors and sent to New York, where they were fired, or marbleized, as it is called, at a very low heat, giving them very much the appearance of the usual Limoge ware; in fact, few could tell the difference. There was almost every variety of decorative work neatly and nicely done—just the sort of thing that ladies like to learn to make for the adornment of their own homes.

Studio and Gallery Notes.

Miss Georgiana Campbell has gone to New York for a few weeks to execute several orders which she has received from there for portraits, and also to be under the instruction of Mr. Healy, whose pupil she has been for a long time. Miss Campbell's latest work here has been upon the portraits of four young children of Mr. Whitehouse, and most admirably has she succeeded in rendering their lovely childish beauty. She also makes a specialty of French pastel painting upon parchment, which is quite a different thing from the ordinary work of that kind we usually see here. Either the superior materials used or the skill in using them, or perhaps both, are productive of very attractive results. The soft flesh tints and tender luminous tones are admirably adapted to children and young girls whose complexion warrant a delicacy of treatment that resembles somewhat a picture upon porcelain, and is almost sure to be flattering.

Gean Smith has been very industrious lately, and has multiplied his works until they are almost too numerous to mention. He has in his studio quite a spirited study of the head of a mustang pony; also a dog picture which he calls the "Marauders," showing four or five mongrels of different breeds slyly stealing a good meat dinner from a basket beside which reclines a sleeping boy. Another quite large picture recently finished depicts sheep, lambs, and barnyard fowls in a realistic manner. Mr. Smith has devoted considerable attention lately to studying and painting horses in motion as they are shown by the instantaneous process of photographing fully illustrated and described in Gov. Stanford's new book entitled "The Horse in Motion," of which Mr. Smith has a copy. The positions actually assumed by a horse in the act of running or trotting, as proven by this new discovery, are not as graceful or picturesque as they are generally represented in the conventional picture. In fact, flying horses—for so they appear after the new method—with feet curled under them, are anything but handsome. However, beauty must be sacrificed to truth, and hereafter we shall have paintings of horses in apparently impossible attitudes.

The American Art Gallery has been stripped of its best pictures for the benefit of St. Louis, to which place Mrs. Green has gone to exhibit them at a reception tendered to her by friends next Tuesday evening, after which she will have what is known as an artists' sale, when pictures are the objects to be disposed of; otherwise it is called an auction. A collection consisting of about twenty-five oil figures and portraits, the work of Mr. Forbes, at one time a resident of Chicago, and now dead, is expected this week at the gallery, which is open to visitors as usual.

Mr. Scott has made several sales at his Adams street gallery during the past week, among them a Van Leemputten sheep interior for $300; a group of chickens, ducks, etc., very fine, by E. R. Maes, of Brussels, for $500; Meisel's "Marie Antoinette a Prisoner in the Temple," for $200; a still-life piece by Harnett for $105; and "Played Out," by Grogier, for $75. Mr. Scott has closed his gallery and taken the remaining pictures East, but intends returning in the fall to establish himself on a permanent basis in Chicago.

A sale was announced at Stevens & Co.'s art store last week of a collection of paintings, consisting for the most part of the well-known wood-interiors of Carl Brenner and a sprinkling of the works of a number of Chicago artists. Owing to some reason which no one seemed able to find out, or declined to talk about if they knew, the sale was pretty much of a failure, most of Mr. Brenner's works being withdrawn for want of competition. Those that were sold, about ten in number, went far below their value.

Miss Koupal will soon place on exhibition at Thayer & Chandler's a painting of a "Spanish Lady," a blonde, whose golden hair is draped and half concealed by a veil of black Spanish lace. She is looking down from a balcony across which is thrown a colored shawl, this and a crimson rose in the square-cut corsage of her dress being the only gleam of bright color. The style of painting is broad, and, like most of this artist's pictures, contains much black and white, in the treatment of which she excels.

The subscribers to the Marshall engraving of the late Henry W. Longfellow are now receiving their artist's proof copies from Mrs. Cadwell, who has the distribution in charge. The engravings prove to be superior to the sample, and when suitably framed make a most valuable and in every way satisfactory portrait and memento of the lamented poet.

Mr. Schwerdt is going to Cleveland to be gone a week or two. He has in his studio a recently-completed oil portrait of a young son of David Richards, the sculptor; also a crayon of Mrs. Frank Crilley; and is now working upon a family group consisting of the wife and two children of Mr. Norton.

At Thurber's is to be seen a large landscape by Cyrenius Hall, entitled a "Summer Day in Bavaria," which is interesting in subject and clear and luminous in tone—a very pleasing picture; also a watercolor by Earle, the subject of which is "Mephistopholes and Faust."

Miss Schermerhorn has made a study for a large picture of Dr. Holland's lovely home in the Thousand Isles, called "Bonnie Castle." She has also some careful and interesting studies of mosses peculiar to that region, which show a great variety of form and color.

Frank Bromley writes that he is spending the month of April in a very enjoyable sketching tour through Italy and the South of France, intending to return to Paris about the 1st of May to visit the Salon, after which he will go to Switzerland for the summer.

G. W. Platt has just finished a very excellent portrait of a son of Mrs. Meatyard. The general tone of the work is brown, kept in pleasing harmony. The same artist also exhibited an "Ideal Portrait" at the rooms of the Decorative Art Society last week.

Mr. Healy visited Chicago recently for the purpose of painting the lifesize full length portrait of a prominent citizen, but his price for the work was considered too high, and so the arrangement fell through and the eminent artist returned to New York.

Frank R. Green is now in the city visiting old friends, and reports affairs as satisfactory to himself at the East, where he has recently disposed of several of his paintings at good prices.

Daniel Kotz has been very sick at his home in South Bend. He is now recovering, however, and will probably return soon in company with E. M. Hough, who is now with him.

Mrs. V. S. Hill has completed a standing portrait of John G. Bush which is pronounced a good likeness. Also a camp scene at Estes Park, Colo.

A number of the pictures in the O'Brien collection, left unsold at the auction, have been disposed of at private sale. Jaeckel's "Street Scene in Berlin" was sold to Mr. W. K. Ackerman for $230; Nicholson's "Sheep Market in Normandy," $200; Isabey's "Court Scene," a work of great power, $600; and some others at lower prices.

The Lydian gallery annex will be permanently closed this week, and such of the pictures as are not purchased here will be returned to their owners.

Mr. Sloan is devoting his time to water-colors with gratifying success, his small landscapes meeting with much appreciation.

G. C. Minor has recently completed a fine crayon likeness of a deceased child of P. Cahana.

Mrs. M. A. Wright is represented in the Philadelphia exhibition of water-colors.

John Donoghue is now modeling a bust of Beethoven from a death-mask.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune.

CHICAGO, April 25.—On Thursday last the President nominated Alphonso Taft, of Ohio, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Austria; William L. Dayton, of New Jersey, Minister Resident of the United States to the Netherlands; Nicholas Fish, of New York, Minister Resident to Belgium, and John M. Francis, of New York, to be Chargé d'Affaires to Portugal; J. B. Wickersham, of Pennsylvania, to be Chargé d'Affaires to Denmark; Adam Badeau, of New York, to be Consul-General to Havana; Harry L. Haight, of New York, to be United States Consul at Prescott.

These positions are all very desirable places for those who covet them, and the whole batch of appointments being sent in at once is evidence of the President's industry and partiality in looking after the few remaining Stalwarts not yet provided for. There is no objection whatever to either of these gentlemen personally; "they are all honorable men," but their selection for these important offices must be regarded nevertheless as a premeditated and deliberate insult to that large and overwhelming majority in the Republican party which nominated and elected James A. Garfield over U. S. Grant.

It is perfectly safe to say that not one of these gentlemen would have been thus favored by the President—because none of them possess conspicuous merit or qualifications above hundreds of other Republicans in all sections of the country—if it were not a notorious fact that each was and is a third-termer. This was the sole recommendation, and it was the only recommendation needed to gain the favorable consideration of the present Chief Magistrate. Instead of adopting Mr. Jefferson's wholesome rule of inquiry with regard to applicants for office, "Is he honest, is he capable?" Mr. Arthur has adopted the more narrow and selfish practice of subordinating everything in his power to "Stalwartism."

In the name of the great majority of the Republican party we protest against these studied and oft-repeated insults with indignant emphasis. We neither concede the President's right to pursue such a selfish course nor commend his good sense in making these invidious distinctions between the different sections of his own party. If he acknowledges his fealty to the party that elected him, and which breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, he ought occasionally to manifest that fact by bestowing some official favors upon the deserving members of the majority. This he has not done in one single notable instance since an inscrutable decree of an overruling Providence made him President of the United States.

The battle in the Chicago Convention between Grant and anti-Grant left many bleeding wounds, which Mr. Garfield, while he lived, did all in his power to heal. He made concessions to the defeated faction by making three of them—three out of seven—members of his Cabinet, and bestowing upon others places of honor and profit. He determined to be the President of the whole party, not a miserable faction of it, and to heal the breach in it that was foolishly made by forcing the third-term heresy upon it. His wholesome example has not been followed by his successor, but on the contrary he has adopted the policy of revenge, and hatred, and factious opposition to the highest interests of the whole Republican party. Mr. Arthur has reorganized his Cabinet upon exactly the theory that has influenced and directed him in all of his official acts since. In recasting it he was so fierce in his selfish determination to keep up the line of distinction between the Stalwarts and anti-Stalwarts, that he overlooked the fine opportunity that was presented to him to aid and encourage the Republicans of the South by giving them a representative among his constitutional advisers, so that the objection of sectionalism now made against him is well taken, and must with shame be admitted. No party leader worthy of the name—no man intent on anything but to carry out the selfish dictates of the pestilent clique which surrounds him, temporarily raised to power by the people's misfortune—would neglect such a chance to recognize the Republicans in the ex-slave States and assist them to regain their lost supremacy.

President Arthur is mistaken if he thinks the Republican party will consent to this scandalous sort of treatment without uttering an indignant protest. He is mistaken if he has made up his mind to put the Republican party in his pocket and walk off with it. And he is still more deluded if he imagines that the course he is now pursuing will unite the party, make Stalwartism more popular with the rank and file of the party than it has been, so that third-termism in any shape or form will be less hateful to the people in 1884 than it was in 1880.

A REPUBLICAN.

Arctic Whalers—Old-Time Whaling Vessels and the Steamers of Progress.

San Francisco Bulletin.

The twenty or more whale ships which came down from the Arctic last autumn have mostly started again for the same destination. These vessels will not arrive in the Arctic before some time in May. They fish by the way, making long stretches out of a direct course, sometimes getting well over toward Japan, and sometimes nosing about the Okhotsk Sea, for any chance to strike a few whales.

Besides the fleet of sailing ships, there will be three steamers in the Arctic this season—viz.: the Belvedere and North Star, of New Bedford, and the new steamer now on the stocks at this port, which will be completed inside the next two months. The sailing ships are all old-fashioned, short, oak-built ships, which have done good service in other business before they were sent around to the Arctic. Some of them were packets fifty years ago. They are still strong, weatherly ships, and seem to be independent of all decay. The cold weather of the Arctic and the saturation of oil have a tendency to preserve ships. Unless these old vessels get nipped in the ice they may be good for at least a quarter of a century more.

By that time there will probably be no use for anything but the screw steamships in whaling. Even now another use of steam in whaling has been introduced—the steam tender or small boat with steam, strong enough to tow a dead whale a long distance, and to tow the whale-boats to the fishing grounds. Steam can not be used in following whales on account of the noise. But it can be used as an auxiliary in the ways suggested, and, it is said, with substantial advantage. A great many whales are struck and lost. But a steam-tender to hitch on and tow thirty or forty miles is the latest improvement in whaling. The old sailing vessels will wear out in the business. They do not represent a great deal of capital.

Now and then an old ship worth $5,000 or $6,000, and twice that sum in the matter of outfit, will come into port with 1,000 barrels of oil, and as much bone as can be stored away. The interest on capital is small. The profits are large. That is why these old bluff-bowed ships soaked with whale oil are so dear to the hearts of their owners. The steam whaler, with outfit, costs anyfrom $70,000 to $120,000, according to size. These must come into port with large fares, or the venture would be a losing business.
